27 Trapped in Dole Fraud

Today

They Mistrust the $ Talk Is Safe
Asiatic Capacity

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Wall Street put up stock prices yesterday as much as four dollars a share in some cases. And 1,400,000 shares were sold "like old times." This means that the "wise ones" think the value of the dollar will drop, some say "as low as twenty-five cents," and he that still has dollars says to himself, "I may as well spend these dollars while they will still buy something."

Others, perhaps wiser, say the President and Mr. Morgenthau, his Secretary of the Treasury, will not let the dollar go so low, and, in any case, it doesn't matter what foreigners think of our dollar while it will buy anything in the United States, where there is everything.

One thing is certain, there is nothing in sight to make the international value of the dollar go higher, no matter what "prosperity" may do. Those who own valuable properties, real estate especially, should not be in too great a hurry to sell. What they have may be worth more dollars a little later.

In numerous places, numerous sorts of propaganda, Nazi, Communist, etc., are under investigation. It is desirable that the American people should know what is going on, although, as a matter of fact, they have little information about anything.

At the same time it should be remembered that nothing is more dangerous than suppressing free speech, even speech in secret. The most harmless things that men can use are WORDS. If you do not permit that, they may use weapons more disagreeable.

The wise British know it and let a man talk as he pleases, giving publicity to any and every theory, as long as he does not advocate violence against an individual. He may stand in Hyde Park, say anything that comes into his mind, and goes home, relieved, having thrown no bomb.

Yesterday Tokio and all Japanese newspapers were excited, naturally, about the news that American farmers in Arizona's "salt river valley" had ordered 1000 Japanese farmers "to get out, and stay out of the valley."

The United States government requests Arizona's governor to see that the rights of Japanese farmers are protected. Arizona has an alien land law forbidding Orientals not born in America to own or lease agricultural land in Arizona. The matter will doubtless be adjusted with proper respect for Japanese sensibilities.

It happens that American farmers would not be allowed to own or lease agricultural lands in Japan if they wanted to, which they do not with ten millions of acres here unused.

There is no reflection on the Japanese or any other Asiatic people as a race. The situation represents the feeling of American farmers that they cannot compete with the Japanese or Chinese, which is rather a compliment than an insult.

In Germany the suggestion that criminals condemned to death be allowed to kill themselves if they wish, and that the old "cup of hemlock" be revived, is made seriously by the ministry of justice. It is recommended in accordance with the ancient idea that "the last wish of a person condemned to death should be granted."

In this country we let the condemned man have ham and eggs for breakfast, or beefsteak, or whatever he wants, but "justice" puts him to death. To let him kill himself might diminish the general respect for law. A "hemlock oration," all very well in the case of a Socrates, would not sound so well in the case of a man killed for murdering his wife.

President Roosevelt, anxious to help farmers, will lend twelve cents a pound on cotton that the growers have held in hopes of better prices.

That's a considerable improvement over four and five cents paid recently.

Senator Thomas, from Oklahoma, calls attention to the fact that the price of cotton depends always on the value of gold. That cotton price is made abroad. With gold worth thirty-five dollars an ounce instead of twenty dollars, cotton automatically is worth nearly double what it was when gold was cheaper.

Long ago the President and General Johnson, NRA, let it be known that they had, as one

PROBE BARES CITY AID SWINDLE

Trapped after months of secret investigating by the police and employes of the city law department at least 27 persons—men and women—are to be haled into municipal court within the next ten days, charged with defrauding the city's welfare deparement of thousands of dollars.

This announcement was made today by Assistant Corporation Counsel Charles S. Sullivan, Jr., who has directed the investigation.

NAMES HELD SECRET

Fearing that some of the worst of the offenders might leave town, if he disclosed their names at this time, Sullivan refused to discuss details of the cases. One East Boston man has already evaded arrest in this manner, he said.

While Sullivan was "pulling his punches" and refusing to disclose the total amount that has been illegally collected from welfare agencies, he did say that the frauds covered a period of several months.

In one case, he said, a man who owns two parcels of property from which he receives an income of $225 a month, has been collecting $15 a week from the municipal welfare department for months.

Many of the cases, Sullivan said, are of this nature—charges against

GEO. A. FERNALD SUSPENDED

George A. Fernald of Winchester, for many years a Boston broker and member of the Boston Stock Exchange, was suspended by the exchange today.

Secretary Rich of the exchange explained that the suspension did not affect the investment firm that bears his name but merely the seat held for personal business. The reason, according to Secretary Rich was:

"Inability to meet certain obligations."

The suspension announcement was heard with no measure of surprise by other members of the exchange, who had gathered for the 10 o'clock opening of the market.

Secretary Rich said the suspension bore no definite date but was ruled indefinite "or until the situation could be straightened out." He cited Section 2, Article 15, of the stock exchange constitution.

In addition to his post as president and director of his banking firm, Fernald is listed as trustee and director in several other banks and mercantile companies.

FIREMEN FREE LOCKED-IN BABY

A two-year-old Roxbury baby, accidentally locked in by her father, was rescued today by firemen.

It happened when Francis Alfred, 35, of Columbus avenue, Roxbury Crossing, placed his baby Hattie in a crib while he went out to a corner grocery store to buy milk.

After leaving the house, he realized that he had locked the front door and discovered he had no key in his possession.

Excited and fearing that harm might come to the baby, he sounded a fire alarm.

The father informed the firemen that his baby was locked in the second floor apartment. A ladder was raised and firemen were forced to break a window to gain entrance.

The apartment door was opened and the father entered to find the baby sound asleep. The firemen departed with a smile.

MERCHANT AT WORCESTER MISSING

Worcester, Aug. 23—Although he has been missing for more than four weeks, news of the mysterious disappearance of Gordon R. Robertson, 38, wealthy Worcester department store executive and clubman, was made public for the first time today.

The man's imposing home at 20 Chamberlain Parkway, on Worcester's fashionable West Side, is empty, and he was dropped a few days ago as vice-president of the John C. MacInnis department store, the Boston Evening American learned exclusively today.

WIFE WON'T TELL

Robertson's wife, the former Helen Buttler, has moved to the home of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. George Buttler, at 11 Lenox street, taking her one son with her. Questioned about her husband's whereabouts today, she said:

"He's gone. That's all I know. I haven't the least idea where he is. And that's all I have to say."

She refused to say whether she was worried about Robertson's disappearance or whether she feared he might have been the victim of foul play or accident.

At the department store, little more could be learned. One of the officers of the firm said Robertson was dropped a few days ago after nothing had been heard from him for several weeks. Robertson had been treasurer and clerk of the MacInnis Corporation before being named vice-president.

Both he and his wife were prominent in Worcester's club circles, being members of the exclusive Players Club. He was also a member of the Quinsagamond Boat Club and other organizations.

POLICE KNOW NOTHING

A few years ago he played a prominent part in bringing the national rowing regatta to Worcester. He was known throughout the country as an oarsman.

If they were informed of Robertson's disappearance, the Worcester police made no announcement of it. Today they said that they knew nothing of his movements.

Neither his wife nor officials of his former firm would say where and when he was last seen. All insisted that his disappearance was a mystery.

Police Hunt Five Gunmen in Auto

Five men, armed with revolvers and riding in an automobile, were hunted today by Boston and Cambridge police following a report that they had been seen to hurry into the car at Charles street circle and drive hurriedly toward Cambridge.

An anonymous informant told Patrolman James E. Sullivan of North End station that he had seen the five men, each with a revolver, depart in the car. The registration number was checked as that of a Cambridge resident.

Stoeckel Quits in Connecticut

Norfolk, Ct., Aug. 23 (INS)—Robbins B. Stoeckel, former Republican motor vehicle commissioner, has removed his name from the list of those seeking the Republican nomination for governor, it was learned today. He said:

"I am not a receptive candidate, I am not seeking any delegates and so far as I know my friends are not attempting to gain delegates for me."

Heiress Bride of 'Choir Boy' Jockey

Miss Cornelia Prime, above, wealthy New York society girl, was revealed today as the bride of J. Nelson Everett, known in race track circles as the "Choir Boy Jockey." Mr. and Mrs. Everett are honeymooning in Rhode Island. They were married at Ballston Spa on August 10. (Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

PRECISION OF $427,000 ROBBERY IS CLUE

By International News Service

New York, Aug. 23—The New York Evening Journal today said that acting on leads furnished by its staff, police had set off on the trail of a former army captain gone bad—one-time chief of Long Island's smartest bootleg ring—in connection with the $427,000 Brooklyn armored car robbery.

Definite information pointing to the complicity of the ex-officer and his gang, the Journal added, came less than 48 hours after the robbery. Witnesses were to be called to examine pictures of at least three suspects.

HAS CRIMINAL RECORD

Police were quoted to the effect that the former officer, whose name was withheld, has a criminal record of three convictions and is now out on probation.

He was described as an ex-captain of the Army Signal Corps, an expert radio operator, a high-powered rum runner and an able seaman. His convictions include smuggling liquor and operating an illegal radio station.

The Journal said police have a picture of the former officer and two members of his gang. It was pointed out that for five or six weeks before the holdup the mob had made its headquarters on a palatial yacht in Sheepshead Bay. From this point, a speedboat could quickly round Coney Island and make contact with the pier at the foot of Bay 35th street, where the bandits took to the water with their huge haul last Tuesday.

MILITARY ASPECT CITED

Police continued to express amazement at the precision of the job. One investigating official bearing out the theory of the ex-army captain leader said:

"The man who engineered it was no ordinary mobster. He was a man who had military training, possibly as an officer. That mob undoubtedly went over the ground day after day for at least a week and timed every move as closely as they could without actually having an armored car to practice on.

"They probably even made

SMITH JOINS ROOSEVELT FOES IN ATTACK ON NEW DEAL

EX-DEMOCRATIC LEADERS JOIN IN MOVE

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Washington, Aug. 23—A conservative backfire against certain—if not many—aspects of the new deal has been started by a group of wealthy and politically prominent figures in both Democratic and Republican parties, who have been vastly perturbed at what they consider the radical tendencies of the Roosevelt administration.

Politicians gasped today when they looked at the names of the sponsors of the new movement, which is to be known as the "American Liberty League," for these sponsors are none other than:

SMITH BACKS MOVE

Alfred E. Smith, Democratic presidential candidate in 1928.

John W. Davis, Democratic presidential candidate in 1924.

Irenee Dupont, industrialist, who supported Smith in '28 and Roosevelt in '32.

James W. Wadsworth, Republican Congressman from New York, ex-senator, and now considered a foremost Republican presidential possibility for 1936.

Whether the league has been conformed to combat Franklin D. Roosevelt's re-election to the presidency in 1936, or merely to combat legislation that its sponsors feel to be "radical" and "socialistic," remains to be seen.

BIG BUSINESS WORRIED

It is widely known that Smith and Davis particularly have been out of sympathy with Roosevelt policies. Smith, in his writings, and Davis, in his speeches, have been acrid in their criticism of the new deal philosophy. Republican conservatives have been no less concerned.

Also, business and corporate interests in both parties have been profoundly disturbed over "who is going to pay the bill" for the New Deal experiments in the form of greatly increased taxes. They fear and believe that they are going to be elected.

Th President and executive director of the American Liberty League is to be Jouett Shouse, former executive chairman of the Democratic national committee until ousted by the Roosevelt forces at the Chicago convention. Shouse also was head of the association against the prohibition amendment, which was credited with yeoman work for repeal.

Because it is just getting organized, the league will take no part in the forthcoming November congressional elections. As to 1936, when a president as well as a new congress is to be elected, that is another story. Shouse said:

NOT ANTI-ROOSEVELT

"I don't know whether the league will be in existence in '36."

He smiled when he said it and added:

"But it is not anti-Roosevelt."

Questioned as to whether it was "anti-New Deal," Shouse smiled enigmatically and was evasive. He had personally explained the formation and purposes of the league to President Roosevelt last week.

Film Jobs Lure 2 Brighton Girls

Police are today seeking Esther Sheridan, 14, of Cypress court, and Miss Carrie Dimmock, 17, of Newton street, both of Brighton, reported missing from their homes since Tuesday. Mrs. Julia Dimock, mother of Carrie, told police they may have gone to New York in quest of a movie career.

2 BOYS CLING TO BOAT; SAVED

Clinging to their overturned sailboat for more than an hour in Quincy Bay, last night, two 14-year-old Wollaston boys were rescued when a member of the Wollaston Yacht Club followed their cries through the darkness.

The rescue came to light today, despite the reticence of Philip Doherty of Wollaston, the rescuer, whose yawl, Leisure, carried the lads back to the clubhouse where they were given hot drinks, dried out and then sent home.

Daniel Carroll and William Hartford, members of the Wollaston Yacht Club Juniors, were sailing their boat in the Mongrel Fish Class twilight race over a three and a half mile course when the craft capsized in a stiff wind more than a mile off the clubhouse just at dusk.

Darkness rapidly hid them and it was more than an hour before Doherty, tracing their cries, found them.

Johnson Faces Power Loss in NRA Shakeup

By International News Service

Washington, Aug. 23—Immediate reorganization of the NRA recovery plan was foreseen today as President Roosevelt hurried back to the capital.

The President expects to leave the Capital Saturday night, but before that time will be faced with the problem of outlining the future policy of his NIRA and of his recovery administrator, Hugh S. Johnson.

Important changes in the administration of the recovery act are under consideration by the President, Johnson told reporters following conferences with the Chief Executive.

Points at issue include price fixing, the anti-trust laws and other conflicts between capital and labor, as well as a synchronization of the NRA and other relief agencies.

Johnson has indicated he is unsympathetic with the tentative arrangement made following conferences with the President, Secretary of Labor Perkins and Donald Richberg, NRA counsel and chief of Mr. Roosevelt's industrial co-ordinating committee.

WOULD LOSE POWER

This tentative arrangement, it is reliably reported, would take the NRA from its present independent position and make its head responsible to a cabinet officer, or to the industrial co-ordinating committee.

The administrator prefers an independent NRA, but has recommended that the position of administrator be abolished and a board named as successor. He implied he would not be averse to becoming chairman of the board.

The imminent changes in the NRA and perhaps the entire relief setup were foreshadowed several months ago as the President began his Pacific vacation.

At that time he placed Richberg in charge of the Relief Emergency Council to replace Frank Walker, and ordered General Johnson to take a vacation. Richberg at the same time began a prolonged absence from the capital. Johnson and Richberg returned soon after the President terminated his Pacific visit and cross country tour. Johnson began another two weeks' vacation yesterday leaving with his personal secretary, Miss Frances Robinson, for the Delaware coast.

Johnson makes no secret that he wants to remain in the Recovery picture as a member of the proposed board and preferably as its chairman or managing director.

It is on this point that the present debate centers, according to information seeping from the President's conference chamber where Johnson, Richberg and Miss Perkins conferred with the President on Monday.

STATUS NOT DEFINED

President Roosevelt has told Johnson "he was needed" in the recovery administration, but the status of his services was not defined. While Miss Perkins has appeared only in the background in the latter labor disputes coming before Johnson, she has indicated little sympathy for some of Johnson's most momentous decisions. On one occasion, during the threatened steel strike of last June, Miss Perkins was asked her opinion of a Johnson decision.

"It was not a labor decision," she replied.

LOWELL TO CALL TEXTILE MASS MEETING

Lowell, Aug. 23—A mass meeting of members of the textile craft unions of Greater Lowell will probably be called tomorrow or Saturday to take action on the proposed nation wide strike of textile workers, union officials announced this morning.

President John J. Molloy of the Woolen and Worsted Weavers Union also announced that a meeting of his organization will be held Saturday morning at 10:30 in the Trades and Labor hall, Merrimack street.

The proposed strike has already been endorsed by another local union not affiliated with the textile workers. Last night, Heelers and Packers Local 38, United Shoe and Leather Workers' Union, unanimously went on record as in favor of the proposed strike. The shoe workers endorsed the proposal that all trades organize for collective bargaining under the provisions of the NRA and declared themselves in sympathy with the aims of the textile workers.

John Hanley, local organizer for the U. T. W., and Edward Walsh, a member of the Weavers' local, who were delegates to the national convention of the textile union in New York last week, have already conferred with labor leaders here and will address the weavers' meeting Saturday morning National officials are expected to attend the meeting and also the mass gathering to explain the stand of the national union regarding the strike, whcih has been set for Sept. 1.

Local labor leaders have pledged themselves to a peaceful strike and they are organizing as many non-union textile workers as possible.

TRIBUTE PAID TO HEROINE

bors and playmates were rumbles of indignation over alleged lack of lifeguards at the beach to care for such children as Mary and her brother, John.

SCENE IS PATHETIC

The scene at the Durant home in Mercer street was pathetic, as the heartbroken parents, three sisters and two other brothers of the girl saw the casket borne to the white hearse.

The pallbearers, all selected by Sister Gertrude Virginia from Mary's graduating class at St. Augustine's school, walked beside the hearse from the house to St. Augustine's church. A solemn high mass of requiem was sung at 9 o'clock. Mary's brother, Martin, 22, served as altar boy.

The escorting playmates were Marie Wynne, 13, of Columbia road, Patricia Ashman, 14, of E street; Eleanor Coughlin, 14, of West Ninth street; Anna Murphy, 13, of Newman street; Mary Feeney, 14, of Harbor street, and Helen McCarthy, 12, of Broadway, all of South Boston.

BOY UNAWARE

Little Thomas stayed at the hospital, unaware of the impressive ceremony accorded the body of his sister. The boy had not been told of his sister's sacrifice.

Like the playmates who escorted the body, Mary was clad in the same white dress she wore at the proud moment of graduation last June. Following the mass the body was taken to Mount Benedict cemetery, West Roxbury, for burial.

Films Beckon Swope, Roosevelt's 'Double'

New York, Aug. 23—Because he bears a slight resemblance to President Roosevelt, Herbert Bayard Swope, chairman of the New York state racing commission, member of the executive committee of the regional NRA board and former executive editor of the New York World, is on the brink of a motion picture debut.

Herbert B. Swope

President Roosevelt

Swope is being considered for the title role in "The President Vanishes," which is to be placed in production next month by the same management that made "Washington Merry-Go-Round" and "Gabriel Over the White House."

Earlier in the week, it was learned, Swope, without benefit of make-up, journeyed to Astoria—New York's movie ce-ter—for a three-hour camera test.

When first aske dabout his screen career, Swope said "it was nothing but a joke." Later he said he preferred not to discuss it at this time. No contract has been signed pending the result of the test and Swope's personal decision.

'Little Eva' Coo to Take Stand in Own Defense

By International News Service

Cooperstown, N. Y., Aug. 23—"Little Eva" Coo steeled herself today against betrayal by Martha Clift, her roadhouse crony, who will throw herself on the mercy of the court and assert she and Mrs. Coo murdered Harry Wright for his insurance.

The 28-year-old mother who quit the monotonous comforts of a farm land home for the pleasures of Eva's roadside resort is the state's trump witness against the one-time queen of Otsego's night life.

BACK AGAINST WALL

Martha Clift's story is to be the state's most potent evidence.

Martha indicted for murder in the first degree, has confessed a part in the killing of Wright upon Crumhorn mountain.

More than mere confession of her own part in the haunted house murder, Martha Clift's story will charge that the killing was directed by "Little Eva" as the execution of a carefully worked out plan.

The evidence to be offered by the confessed accomplice against the woman now on trial is payment to the state — not for freedom, but a chance to live behind bars in the woman's prison at Auburn. Donald H. Grant, district attorney, has admitted this.

LENIENCY ADMITTED

The prosecutor has told the farmer jury of fourteen men that Martha Clift will be permitted to plead guilty to murder in the second degree if she helps the state in its attempt to send Eva to the death house.

But Eva Coo is going to fight back. She is going to take the stand in her own defense.

This was indicated by her attorneys when they won a motion to have the court limit the state's cross-examination of the road house keeper to her own testimony and the confession the district attorney claims she made to him.

"Little Eva" has said that when she takes the witness stand she will rip things wide open in this peaceful, smugly respectable community.

WILL NAME NAMES

She has promised to name names—to hit back by revealing the names of the great and small who played in her resort.

Short, chunky, the Clift girl was brought to court today under guard of a matron, a deputy sheriff and a state trooper.

Although under indictment for murder and self-confessed, the girl was permitted a seat among the spectators.

She listened to Mrs. Iva Fink, and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Hunt identifying "Little Eva" as one of the women they saw on Crumhorn mountain on the night of the murder.

MYSTERY FIRE IN BOURNE

Bourne, Aug. 23—The Bourne theater, part of the Bournehurst dance hall, which was destroyed by fire last fall, today was burned to the ground by a blaze of mysterious origin.

The fire was discovered by George Jackson, attached to the United States Army Engineers office, located on the Cape Cod canal.

The building was a roaring furnace in a few minutes. Fire apparatus from Sagamore assisted the local department.

Love Denied, So Girls Gulp Forks, Knives

By Associated Press

Budapest, Aug. 23—Because they were not permitted to see their swethearts among the troops of the Hungarian army, school girls of the reformatory at Rakospalota developed what doctors diagnosed today as mass hysteria.

The girls, ranging in age from 12 to 18 years, began swallowing all sorts of objects from teaspoons to tooth brushes. They had to be given hospital treatment immediately and some were reported dying from the effects of operations to remove the objects.

The girls had been forbidden to write their boy friends, so they started smuggling out their love letters in loaves of bread and in cakes. This subterfuge was exposed and punishment was swift.

Then the epidemic of mass hysteria broke out in the school, culminating in the orgy of swallowing foreign objects.

JOCKEY CHOIR SINGER WEDS HEIRESS

Providence, R. I., Aug. 23—The "Choir-Boy Jockey," J. Nelson Everett, is home with a winner again today.

And stakes in the race that it has just become known that "Jock" Everett has won are the heart and hand of a conspicuously comely young woman, who was known to high New York society in her very recent "deb" days as Miss Cornelia Prime, 20-year-old daughter of a former Park avenue horse owner and gentleman follower of the turf.

WED TWO WEEKS AGO

The marriage of the ex-Miss Prime and Jockey Everett became known today, when the honeymooners were confronted by newspaper men with official records of the wedding, at Ballston Spa, New York, on August 10.

The bride—whose dad used to own racing horses whose names were in win lists on all the principal tracks of the country—was insistent today that her romance with "Jock" Everett "had nothing unusual about it." She said:

"We were mutually attracted and we certainly didn't elope at all. We planned our marriage for a long time. The ceremony was performed at Ballston Spa, not far from Saratoga, where my husband was busy then. The clergyman was Rev. Harry J. Swan and we were attended by old friends of mine. They were Peggy Dangerfield of New York and Bob Haines, also of New York.

NO FAMILY OPPOSITION

"Of course we'll be happy. Why wouldn't we? We have common interests and common tastes.

"The horses? Of course, we'll still be crazy about them. They have been the big thing in our lives for years and years and years.

"No, there isn't any family opposition to our marriage. It was all talked over in advance. That's why I say it wasn't really an elopement. But, of course, people generally didn't know. They can know now. I'm just glad and proud."

HARBOR YIELDS MISSING BOY

After being missing for a week, the body of Anthony De Russi, 12, of 7 Drake place, East Boston, was found floating today off Rip Rap rocks, at the foot of Marginal street, East Boston.

Pasquale Ippolito of 136 Webster street and John Keating of 441 Frankfort street, both of East Boston, were out in a boat when they sighted the body.

They notified harbor police and the body was taken to Constitution wharf, the police dock, from where it was removed to North Grove street mortuary. There it was identified by the boy's father, Sylvester De Russi.

Young De Russi was last seen alive a week ago tonight when he told his parents he was going down to the shore to watch some firemen fish. He was the fifth in a family of nine children.

Soft Voiced Thug Robs Bridge Party

Chicago, Aug. 23 (INS)—Kenilworth police today sought a soft-spoken bandit who appeared in the midst of a bridge party in the home of Mrs. Mario Zander and robbed 12 young matrons of $3000 in jewels.

"This is a holdup, ladies. Keep quiet, give me your jewels and you won't be hurt," the gunman quietly announced.

TEARS CHANGE TO SMILES WITH NEWS "MOTHER'S FOUND"

"WHAT'LL I DO — CRY OR WAIT"

"STILL NO NEWS — AH GEE"

"HERE'S SOMEONE NOW"

"WHAT YOU'VE FOUND MOTHER"

"NOW I'M HAPPY AGAIN"

This youngster, abandoned in a Brookline lot by his mother, Julia Sullivan, was waiting today at Chardon street home for the appearance of his mother, blissfully unaware of the fact that she is facing Brookline district court. Tearfully the mother admitted to police that she had abandoned the child because of her inability to pay a $2.50 weekly board charge. The youngster, auburn haired and blue eyed, is already the idol of the matrons at the Chardon street home and is waiting anxiously for a peek at his "Mumsie" today. He'll get it too, if court officials aren't too strict in meting out punishment. These pictures snapped by a Boston Evening American staff photographer show the infant in his various moods.

TRAP SET AFTER SECOND MAN IS BEATEN

Following a savage beating administered to a New York salesman in a Gainsboro street apartment house, the second such victim of a beating and robbery in the same house in two weeks, police were preparing a trap for apartment house marauders in the Back Bay.

Charles F. Mills, 58, today's victim, is dying in City Hospital with a bad fracture of the skull and other injuries suffered at the hands of two men to whose knock he opened his apartment door early today.

Mills, before lapsing into a semi-coma at the hospital, told police that when he answered the knock two men pushed him into the apartment and one said, "Put your hands up."

GET LESS THAN $1

Before he could comply, the novelty salesman was set upon, beaten and robbed of less than $1, all the money he had on him at the time.

Attracted by cries from the apartment, Charles R. Hussey, 60, also a novelty salesman, an occupant of the building and the victim of the first beating and robbery on Aug. 8, saw two men hurrying away in an automobile and notified police.

Sergeant Charles Eldredge and Patrolman Frank Kearney responded and rushed Mills to the hospital, where he was found to be suffering from a fractured skull, a fracture of the jaw and concussion of the brain. Doctors said he had little chance for decovery.

FINGERPRINTS FOUND

Bloody fingerprints obtained by John Cameron, fingerprint expert of the bureau of records, were considered by police a good clue in tracing the bandits.

When Hussey was beaten and robbed of $9 in similar fashion, it was by a lone marauder, whom he described as about 30 years old and six feet tall. Neither of today's bandits answered that description Hussey said.

Hussey was confronted in the hallway of the apartment house by the attacker who either was drunk or feigned drunkenness.

When Hussey attempted to avoid him by going into the apartment, the thug forced his way in and set upon the salesman, rendering him unconscious but not injuring him seriously.

Screwdriver Clue Leads to Arrest

Charles Colleran, 27, of Chilton street, Belmont, was held by police today charged with an attempt to break into the apartment of John J. Crowley, Commonwealth avenue, Brighton.

Police say they found a screwdriver on Colleran's person. Marks made by the screwdriver, according to police, were found on the door of Crowley's apartment.

AMY CONQUERS RAIN IN HOP

By Associated Press

Le Bourget, France, Aug. 23—Amy Johnson Mollison, in training for the London-to-Melbourne air race this fall, brought an eight-passenger transport plane through driving rain from Stapleford, Eng., to Le Bourget flying field today.

She is the first woman pilot on the London-Paris line and she expects to take her regular daily run just like the other pilots. She said:

"I am very proud for I have more admiration for the obscure and regular task of a commercial pilot than for a great exploit accomplished in a moment of enthusiasm."

BOYS PREVENT TRAIN WRECK

Scores of railroad passengers went about their business in Providence and other towns today, unconscious of the fact that they owed their lives to the heroism of two Dedham boys.

Except for the courageous action of Joseph Anufrom and John Dudutis, both 12, of Hooper road, Dedham, the Providence express, heavily laden with passengers, would probably have been wrecked by a railroad tie placed across the tracks between Dedham and Readville.

The boys, taking a walk near the New Haven railroad tracks, noticed a man suddenly stop his car and vault the fence to the road bed.

Dragging a stout railroad tie from a pile, the boys told officials, the man laid it across the southbound tracks, where the express was shortly due to pass. He then hid in some brush.

Scenting a plot to wreck the train, the boys climbed the fence and pulled the tie from the rails.

As soon as they left the spot, however, the man returned and replaced the tie in its original position, across the tracks. Then, as the whistle of an approaching train was heard, the boys said, the man ran toward his auto and disappeared.

With only seconds to spare, the two boys scurried back to the tracks and pushed the timber from its dangerous position.

Approaching on the other track, bound for Boston, Fireman W. F. McCulloch of a local train, saw their act. He stopped his train and obtained the boys' story.

Science Finds Rare Dinosaur

By Associated Press

New York, Aug. 23—From the dinosaur "Valley of Death" in Wyoming has been taken the skull of a rare reptile that waddled through the swamps 140,000,000 years ago. Announcement of the find came today from F. Trubee Davison, president of the American Museum of Natural History.

The skull is that of Barosaurus, a huge and little known dinosaur of which there is no complete fossil in existence.

With this discovery, science establishes the corpus delecti of Barosaurus. It is the first Barosaurus skull ever found.

MOTHER OF WAIF ON PROBATION

Facing Brookline Court with downcast eyes, an unwed mother heard herself placed on probation today for a year, with a possibility that she never would be allowed care of her baby again.

The baby, John, who will be a year old in 19 days, is the baby abandoned near Leverett pond, Brookline, across from the Jamaicaway, by Julia Sullivan of Brighton, a domestic, because she could not pay his board.

In court today the mother pleaded guilty to abandonment and was placed on probation in charge of Miss Josephine Wilder, assistant probation officer, with the matter of the baby's future undecided.

Judge Philip S. Parker was told that Mrs. Rubin Tabrisky of Ransom road, Brighton, by whom Miss Sullivan, 24, is employed, will retain the mother in her employ, because she is an earnest, conscientious worker.

Rogell Sued for Damage Done in Love Raid

By Universal Service

Los Angeles, Aug. 23—Mrs. Clair Eugenia Smith, wealthy mother of William Van Renselaer Smith, youthful attorney, has stepped into the tangled Rogell-Smith divorce and love balm cases.

She entered the court lists by asking payment for damage alleged to have been done to furnishings in her Beverly Hills mansion last August 11, when Albert Rogell, film director, assertedly headed a raid by private detectives in quest of evidence to be used in his divorce suit against Ena Gregory Rogell.

Mrs. Smith, who is the widow of a coffee magnate, specifically names Rogell, his nephew, Sidney Rogell, and his attorney, Milton M. Cohen, Jr., as participants in the raid, according to her suit for damages which was filed in municipal court.

The son has been named co-respondent by Rogell, and also sued by him for $150,000 in an alienation of affections action. Smith has countered with a $500,000 damage suit against Rogell, Milton M. Cohen, Jr., and Milton M. Cohen, Sr.

'Bank Robbed, Thief Slain,' Cheer Newton 'Holdup'

"Calling all cars . . . bank holdup in the square!"

Less than five minutes after that call was flashed over the Newton police radio today, one "bandit" lay prone in "death" and three others were handcuffed to police in Newton Center.

The dead bandit was really a policeman, as were the three others who were handcuffed. It was the first staged bank holdup in New England and proved a great success to police as well as a delight to an audience of about 1000.

ALARM TRYOUT

Bank officials arranged with police for the demonstration as a combination tryout of a new bank alarm system and the police radio.

At 11 o'clock, Patrolmen Walter Hartford, Howard Manter, Joseph Kerrivan and John Donahue drove to the Beacon street curb side of the bank. Hartford remained at the wheel. The others, clad in civilian hats and wearing white arm bands, strolled in their best bandit manner into the front entrance.

Four clerks sounded the secret alarm at their approach. It flashed to Newton police headquarters. The radio sounded the warning. No outside bell was sounded at the bank.

Patrolmen David Dalton and Joseph Smith were riding in an armored police car at Newton Corner when the flash came. They wheeled and skidded up to the front door of the bank in one minute and 47 seconds.

"SHOTS" FIRED

"Bandit" Kerrivan dashed from the door of the bank. He was brought down by a blank cartridge from the gun of Patrolman Dalton. Three other police cars dashed to the doors of the bank nearly simultaneously. One immediatey captured "Bandit" Hartford, waiting at the wheel of the bandit car.

Howard Manter was the second to leave the bank. The muzzle of a police gun brought his surrender. Patrolman Raymond W. Taffe was his captor.

Taffe and Patrolman Joseph Smith then hastily put on bullet-proof vests and gas masks, entered the bank and emerged with Donahue.

Officials said the time from the approach of the bandit car to the final "arrest" was less than five minutes.

Mayor Sinclair Weeks, Police Chief Michael T. Hughes, Chief Thomas Godley of Fitchburg, Newton's board of aldermen, and many other officials expressed satisfaction over the show.

CROWD THRILLED

The visitors inspected the new armored cars and other equipment recently purchased for frustration of crime.

Three of the clerks sounded the alarm, the "bandit-policemen" reported later. The fourth, a girl clerk, showed a sign of nervousness and a slight motion that showed she was sounding the alarm.

Much of the crowd was made up of children, all of whom seemed quite thrilled at the performance.

CAPONE LIFE OF EASE OVER

By Associated Press

San Francisco, Aug. 23—Prison labor—48 hours a week of it—was in store today for Al "Scarface" Capone and 52 other convicts transferred yesterday from other prisons to the new escape-proof federal penitentiary on Alcatraz Island.

An eight-hour work period for each day except Sunday has been mapped out for the new arrivals, including the former Chicago gang chief, Warden James A. Johnston said.

The transfer of Capone to the new prison, which Attorney General Homer S. Cummings said was for convicts, who attempted to maintain outside contacts at other penitentiaries and were potential jail breakers, brought a protest from his attorney at Atlanta, Frank A. Doughman.

He pointed out that Capone's appeal, now before the United States supreme court, was brought in the federal court for the northern district of Georgia.

The former Chicago gangster was convicted of income tax evasion and sentenced to 11 years.

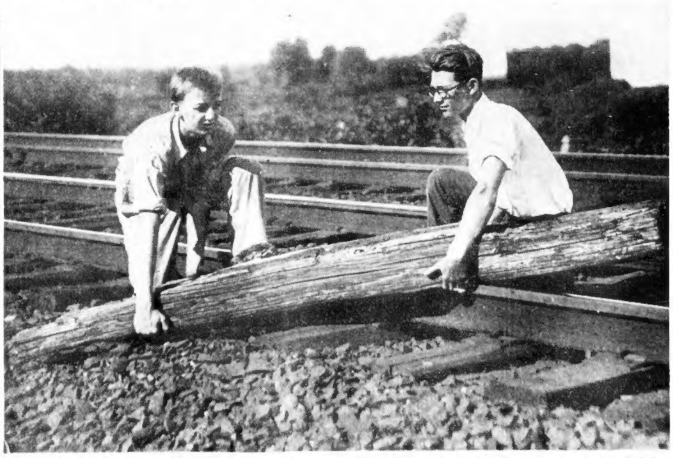
Dedham Boy Heroes Re-enact Drama That Balked Wreck



Two Dedham boys are heroes today and scores are able to go about their business without loss of life or limb as a result of the heroism and courageous action of Joseph Anufrom and John Dudutis in saving the Boston-Providence train from a wrecking plot. The youths, both workers on a Canton farm, pulled a tie from the tracks twice and saved the heavily laden passenger express from a derailment that would have been a certain wreck. The boys are shown above as they re-enacted their bravery, with the very tie used by the plotter, for a Boston Evening American cameraman.

ACTRESS WILL WED SCHENCK AT PICKFAIR

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service

Hollywood, Aug. 23—Pickfair, the beautiful estate of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, will be the scene of Joseph Schenck's marriage to Merle Oberon, attractive foreign actress.

The ceremony will be performed in about seven weeks, after Schenck travels to Europe to bring back his bride-to-be. He says that he expects to leave Hollywood in four weeks for London where Miss Oberon is appearing in an Alexander Korda film.

Schenck says that several of his friends offered to give him the wedding, but that Miss Pickford was first to invite him to have the ceremony performed at her home.

HUNTS HOME FOR BRIDE

Miss Oberon, who is described by Darryl Zanuck as being beautiful, charming, and just right for the popular Joe Schenck, will be a guest of the Zanucks when she reaches here.

Meanwhile, Schenck is looking for a house for his bride, but he will make no decision until she herself puts the approval upon her future home.

Douglas Fairbanks, who met Schenck's plane, will spend part of his time as Schenck's guest while in Beverly Hills. Schenck said that he hoped that Mary and Douglas would have a reconciliation, but nobody could say as to that. He said that they could continue to be great friends, if a reconciliation were impossible, just as Norma Talmadge and he were great friends. Schenck and Norma were parted by a divorce.

MAY CONTINUE CAREER

This writer believes a reconciliation is not impossible and that Mary and Douglas, if things can be adjusted, will patch up their differences. They have been seeing each other every day, not once but many times, and both of them have the love and good wishes of their friends.

Hollywood will be Douglas Fairbanks' home and, since they both have so many friends in common and so many interests, in spite of Fairbanks' well-known wanderlust and love of travel, it seems more than likely that before the week is over we'll see them together again, although they have not yet made such a decision.

Schenck said he would not object to Miss Oberon's continuing her career as a screen artist if she has her heart set on pictures. On this subject he said:

"I hope she will be willing to be just Mrs. Schenck and that she will not want to appear in pictures. If she does, however, I shall help her all I can."

BOYCOTT CLAIM IN HEEL WAR

The lately flourishing war between the Gregory and Read Wood Heel factory of Malden and labor union opponents of its policies had taken a new court turn today with shop owners seeking an injunction to protect themselves from a New England-wide boycott allegedly being organized against them by union officers.

The United Shoe and Leather Workers Union, which was responsible for picketing of the wood heel factory in Malden, is now "conspiring" to drive owners out of business by enlisting 500 shoe manufacturing firms in a boycott agreement, the Gregory and Read company avers.

The company's petition, seeking court order against the alleged boycott conspiracy, was filed in Salem superior court.

Home Run Wins in Malden

Fayette Geer, of Murray Hill road, Malden, believes that home is the safest place. When a stranger accosted him on a dark street Geer waited for no argument but ran at top speed for home with the stranger in pursuit.

Up the steps he dashed with the stranger a close second. He ran into the house, slammed the door, and telephoned police, but the stranger used as much speed in escaping as he had in chasing. What the fellow wanted, Geer did not know.

Mary Pickford Aids Schenck's Romance

NORMA TALMADGE

MERLE OBERON

Merle Oberon, British actress, will wed Joseph Schenck, U. S. film producer, at Pickfair, the Hollywood estate of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, according to word received from the Pacific Coast. Schenck's first marriage to Norma Talmadge, screen star, ended in a divorce. Miss Oberon will be brought to this country from Europe by Schenck and the ceremony will be performed in about seven weeks. (Pictures from International News Photograph Service.)

Mary Tells Joy Because 'Friend' Doug Is Back

By MARIAN RHEA
International News Service Special Correspondent

Hollywood, Aug. 23—She wore a simple blue dress that matched her eyes. She smiled the enchanting Pickford smile.

And then Mary, America's sweetheart for 20 years, in one of those rare, friendly interviews which seem more like pleasant, impromptu conversations, told how she is "between pictures."

Down the hill from Pickfair, Beverly Hills "dream house" of Douglas Fairbanks and his bride of a decade or more ago, Doug was racing around the United Artists studio, preparing to embark upon a huge producing program.

DOUG HOME

A hectic time for the dashing Doug, what with Lord Ashley's divorce suit against Lady Sylvia Ashley on file in the London courts naming Douglas as the cause of the trouble.

But now he was back. He and Mary already had met two or three times and possibility of a reconciliation between them was in the minds of friends and fans the world over.

Mary just smiled when asked about Douglas—what they were going to do; when she would see him next; whether she would take him back. She said:

"I can't talk about it. I just can't. It would be like wearing my heart upon my sleeve for all to see.

"VERY, VERY HAPPY"

"Of course, I am very, very happy Douglas is home again. One is always glad to see old friends—

"And when that 'old friend' is one's husband, one is doubly glad to see him.

"I am just sort of enjoying life these days.

"I seem not to be thinking deeply, but only to be reflecting quietly, without fear of not even knowledge of the future."

72 Face Arrest Here in Welfare Investigation

Another large class of offenders consists of persons, who are legally entitled to assistance, but who preferred to have their work cards stamped illegally, thus collecting their weekly dole without performing the labor usually asked of these recipients by the city.

In this connection, Sullivan admitted that the bogus stamp racket, against which such a vigorous drive was conducted by municipal, state and federal authorities, is still flourishing here. Sullivan said:

"We don't know yet who has these stamps, or how much they are making out of this racket, but we are going to ask the judges to make these people talk—if possible."

The amounts obtained by this last class of offenders are comparatively slight, Sullivan said, proceedings against them being chiefly designed to obtain information about the welfare stamp racketeers.

WARRANTS SOUGHT

Owners of homes from which no revenue is derived need not fear that they have been violating the laws by receiving relief, Sullivan said today, but those who have bank accounts can expect to see their names on a warrant.

At least 14 of the warrants are to be asked before the end of this week, it is understood.

Among the men and women to be brought to court, according to investigators, there are seven who own automobiles; three who took their families for expensive vacations in New Hampshire, and one husband and wife who have $1000 in the bank, own two houses and have just set their son up in business by buying him a motor truck.

Many of the accused in the frauds, although long carried on welfare rolls, have jobs and bank accounts, police assert.

The undercover check-up which resulted today in exposures leading to court action has been in progress for three months, it was declared.

Most flagrant of the cases discovered, according to Detective Salavatore DiNatale, was that of a family living in South Boston.

The husband, it will be charged, has worked steadily for 17 months on a job that pays him $30 a week. He has a car of his own, a bank account of $1000, a comfortable home and two houses which he owns and rents.

Yet for two years, the police allege he and his wife have drawn $15 a week from poor relief funds of the city of Boston.

This same man, police declare, has just purchased a brand new auto truck and made a present of it to his son, who wants to start a business of his own selling and delivering fruit and vegetables.

Assigned with DiNatale on the secret investigation of the public welfare frauds has been Detective Louis Pinkofski, also of police headquarters.

THOUSANDS LOST

The two officers, so they said today, have uncovered larceny cases which in all have cost the city thousands of dollars.

All but one of the alleged offenders against whom warrants will be sought are men, the detectives said.

The one exception is the South Boston wife with the well-to-do husband, the auto and the rented houses.

The families which, while receiving public doles, treated themselves to New Hampshire vacations, were never so happy at the resorts they patronized that they couldn't come to Boston once a week to collect their "poor" money, the police assert.

When the dole had been pocketed, however, back went hubby or wife to join the rest of the household in the mountains or at a lake.

Application for the warrants against the dole recipients will be made in municipal court tomorrow morning, the detectives said.

The names of all the 15 alleged offenders have already been stricken from public relief rolls.

N. E. Farm Plans to Be Discussed

Concord, N. H., Aug. 23 (AP)—Plans for the application to declining farm areas in New England of President Roosevelt's agricultural readjustment will be discussed at the annual forestry conference in Plymouth, September 5-7, it was announced today. Among the speakers will be Governor John G. Winant.

Ex-Army Captain Sought In $427,000 Holdup their runs to their getaway points so that they knew within a minute or two the exact time it would take.

"They didn't fire back at the armored car when it was pursuing them because they didn't intend to waste any time or attract attention by blasting at it."

Each of the armored trucks operated by the United States Trucking Corporation is insured for $5,000,000. An official of the company said that all claimants had been paid. He said the robbery must have been planned at least 90 days in advance and the truck involved followed most of that time. The insurance was covered by the Commercial Union Assurance Co., Ltd., a London concern.

Three Girls Sought in Hunt for Bandits

Belief that the bandid gang which escaped with $427,000 in loot in a Brooklyn, N. Y., holdup Tuesday, has split up into three groups to foil pursuit, grew today as search was pressed by land and sea.

Off the New England coast six Coast Guard destroyers were conducting a systematic search of coastal waters and secluded bays and inlets. Their hunt was aimed at the capture of at least two of the gang who fled in a power boat and are thought to have secured refuge on a rum runner.

TWO STATES JOIN HUNT

Meanwhie New Jersey and Pennsylvania police were checking reports that placed the other two groups in those states.

In West Reading, Pennsylvania, police were seeking a powerful sedan containing two swarthy complexioned men and three attractive women. A gas station proprietor noticed Federal Reserve money bags on the floor of the car when it stopped for gas.

At about the same time, in Ocean City, N. J., a parking space attendant reported seeing the same type of bag in an open car which stopped at the parking space for a short time. In the car were three men, one a hunchback.

At the gasoline station in West Reading, the driver of the car ordered three gallons of gasoline and one of the girls gave the attendant $10 in 25 cent pieces in payment of the 48-cent charges, at the same time requesting that the change be paid in bills.

CASH BAGS ON FLOOR

The attendant who noticed federal reserve money bags on the floor of the car also reported seeing a case bulging with small coins.

Police were frankly hopeful today that the two cars might contain some of the gang that perpetrated the most daring holdup in the New York history.

An alarm sent out at the request of the Reading police read as follows:

"Be on the lookout for a dark blue, four-door Cadillac sedan, about 1932 model bearing New York registration plates. There are two men and three women in car, men about 30 or 35 years of age, dark wavy hair, wearing dark clothes, appear to be Italians. The women about 20 or 25 years of age, apparently Americans. All are well dressed.

HUNCHBACK IN GROUP

"It is believed that the occupants of this car may have been implicated in the $427,000 robbery in New York or some other robbery and are using this method to get rid of the change. The quarters were wrapped in an orange colored paper with the words "Abbott Coin Counter, New York. 'Any information notify state police, Reading, Pa.'"

In New York police officials in charge of the hunt were considerably heartened by the news that the federal government had interested itself in the case.

CARDINAL MADE K. OF C. HONOR MEMBER

Detroit, Aug. 23—William Cardinal O'Connell, archbishop of Boston and dean of the American Catholic hierarchy, was made honorary member of supreme council of Knights of Columbus by supreme directors of the order at their meeting here.

His Eminence becomes the only living honorary member. Others who have held this honor include Albert, late King of Belgium, Marshal Foch, Cardinal Mercier and Duke of Aragua.

SWIFT RE-ELECTED

Judge John E. Swift of Milford, Massachusetts, was re-elected to the supreme board of directors.

Ray T. Miller, Cleveland, former mayor, will fill the vacancy on the supreme board created by the recent death of James H. Carroll, Lewiston, Me.

The place of the 1935 convention will be determined by the officers and directors.

CLEAN FILMS DISCUSSED

Behind closed doors, members of the order discussed such questions as the campaign against salacious motion pictures and the stand to be taken on Communistic activities in the country.

William J. McGinley, of New Haven, Ct., supreme secretary, reported a total membership of 454,763.

A net decrease in membership of 41,365 for the year ended June 30 was announced, but officers pointed out that the order was unusually strong financially with approximately 280 million dollars in insurance in force this year.

HUNDREDS SAIL ON EXCURSION

Hundreds of excursionists lined the rails of the Cape Cod Steamship Co. Steamer Steel Pier when it pulled away from Commercial Wharf this morning for a cruise of 125 miles down the South Shore coastline and through the Cape Cod Canal.

This trip was made possible at half rate fares for youngsters and adults by the Boston Evening American.

The Steel Pier left dock at 10 a. m. and plied its course southward through the waters of Massachusetts Bay towards Buzzards Bay.

Eagles Attack 2 Children

Cobleskill, N. Y., Aug. 23—The thrilling adventure of two Cobleskill children in their successful attempts to fight off two bald eagles which attacked them on the east slope of Glastonbury mountain, in Vermont, was told here.

The children, Gale, 11, and Gloria, 12, son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Wetmore, had gone into the Vermont wilderness with their father, who collects rare specimens of aquatic plants.

While left alone, the children were beset by the eagles with wing spreads, they related, of five or six feet.

For several frightening minutes the eagles soared about their heads, sweeping at them with talons spread wide and sharp beaks agape. Gale and Gloria fought them off with sticks and stones, escaping injury.

Fireman, Driving From Blaze, Dies

Portsmouth, R. I., Aug 23—Charles Lunan, driver of the Portsmouth fire department chemical truck, died suddenly while driving the truck from a small fire at Common Fence Point.

When he slumped over the wheel, Wilfred Matthews, who was riding with him, took control and stopped the truck.

objective, a 10 per cent reduction in hours with a 10 per cent increase in pay. The change has now been incorporated in the cotton garment code, the first "ten-ten" agreement.

Shorter hours, higher wages and reasonable inflation to provide more money should "prime the pumps" of prosperity for a time.

New York's latest strike is that of 5000 workers whose business is making bathrobes. They want to work only thirty-five hours a week, which, under present buying conditions, is probably ample.

The 35-hour week means 133 hours a week for sleep, amusement and self-improvement, a change from old "12 hours a day, 6 days a week" methods.

FORMER MAYOR CURLEY TO INVADE CAPE TONIGHT

Former Mayor James M. Curley, in his campaign for the Democratic nomination for Governor, today invaded the Cape district. As guest speaker he addressed a meeting of the Chambers of Commerce of that entire section. Following this gathering, Curley will attend an organization get-to-gether of the Curley workers in the country.

General Charles H. Cole, in a statement today, charged Curley with "lifting" an entire section of a Cole circular, in an address given by the former Boston executive on Tuesday night. The excerpts, Cole said, recited the accomplishments of President Roosevelt.

Cole declared that he "objects" to writing his opponet's "speeches for him."

Residents of the city eligible to vote in the state primaries, September 20, will not have to go to City hall to register starting tonight as branch booths in each of the 22 wards in Boston will be opened for this purpose.

The hundreds of candidates for public office were busy today canvassing the wards and urging the unregistered voters to take advantage of the local offices which will be open every night between 6 and 10 o'clock from now until Aug. 31, the last day for registering. The central registration office at City Hall will continue registering citizens from 9 a. m. until 10 p. m. daily until Aug. 31.

O'CONNELL JOB NOW OPEN

Appointment by President Roosevelt of a successor to P. A. O'Connell as NRA director for Massachusetts and director of the National Emergency Council, will be announced within a week, it was indicated today from Washington.

Mr. O'Connell, whose resignation was offered some time ago, but only now accepted, said that pressure of his own business as president of the E. T. Slattery Company required him to give up the post. O'Connell said:

"I am still in sympathy with the NRA. I shall not disassociate myself entirely from this constructive work. I have made some recommendations as to my successor, and the appointment may be made within a few days."

During the year that O'Connell served as NRA director, the Massachusetts office advanced to top rating. A little over a year ago it ranked next to the bottom.

Massachusetts firms on the whole have given splendid co-operation to the NRA, Mr. O'Connell declared. He said:

"Although it meant radical increases in wages they had to pay and in the number of people they had to employ for a given volume of production, we find retail prices, as measured by the Fairchild retail price index, are only 15 percent higher than last year."

The retiring NRA leader revealed that up to August 11, his office had brought about the payment of $32,000 in back wages to employes.

Hit, Run Cyclist Hurts Boy

Beverly, Aug. 23—John Ryensky, 8, of West Dane street, was seriously injured here tonight when he was struck while crossing the street near his home by a hit-and-run bicyclist.

RABIES TEST ON QUINCY DOGS

Heads of two dogs believed to have been suffering from rabies were sent today to the Harvard medical laboratory by Motorcycle Officer James A. D. MacKay of Quincy, the dog officer, for tests.

One head was that of an eight-month-old mongrel, which had bitten one child and 10 dogs before being captured last Saturday.

Dr. James Emmerson, Quincy veterinary, said the dog had all the symptoms of rabies, and his prediction that the dog would die within a few days was borne out.

The second head was that of a German shepherd, three years old, which disrupted the household of Mrs. Mina Kerr of 40 Grossman street, West Quincy, last night, threatening the safety of Mrs. Kerr and her two sons, Kenneth, six months old, and Wilbur, 5.

This dog, mother of seven puppies, three weeks old, had been left in the house by Mrs. Kerr's mother-in-law. It was shot by a Quincy policeman.

Girl, 3, Run Over by Ice Truck Dies

Joan Keefe, three, of Wenham street, Forest Hills, is dead today after being run over by an ice truck near her home.

According to police the brakes on the truck suddenly released while the child was sitting on the running board, throwing her under the truck. Carlton Benson of Weld street, Forest Hills, driver of the truck was returning after making an ice delivery, when he saw the truck rolling down the hill. He jumped on the running board and set the brakes only to discover the child's body under the rear wheels. She was declared dead a few minutes later at Forest Hills hospital.

BARBARA GLIDDEN ANNE PETERSON PEGGY FARNSWORTH

After days and days of crafty yachting by fair society folk in the waters near the Hingham Yacht Club, a winner of the trial yacht races has been decided—the Duxbury trio. It was an exciting contest—it lasted for ten days. Teams from Plymouth, Hingham and several other towns participated. The winning crew members, Miss Barbara Glidden, Miss Anne Peterson and Captain Peggy Farnsworth, will go to Rye, New York, on September 5 for the final races for society yachting folk. Look at the durable clothes worn by the winners. Miss Glidden was attired in dungarees, while her shipmates wore shorts. (Picture by Boston Evening American Staff Photographer.)

4 GIRLS GAGGED IN 'KIDNAP' PLOT

Ogden, Utah, Aug. 23—An apparent attempt to kidnap four young girls, all members of prominent Utah families, sent police in search of three men today.

Accosting the girls in a wooded ravine where they were on a picnic, the three men bound and gagged their victims, but were frightened away when the sound of approaching horses was heard.

The girls, who freed themselves from the bonds after the men fled, were: Jean Scrowcroft, 12, and Margo Spargo, 13, both of Ogden, and Eldeen Mulcahy, 13, and Joan Lehman, both of Salt Lake City.

R. C. Moore, chief of police, said the men might have been contemplating kidnaping the girls for ransom.

RENTAL HUNTING with Barbara Holmes

The month of August brings so many inquiries for small apartments to the Barbara Holmes Bureau, that I made a special rental hunting tour for suites convenient to down town Boston, efficient, and at the same time, within the price range of the moderate budget. There are such apartments.

RESERVOIR SECTION

In Brighton, for example, in the Reservoir section, I saw a charming three-room suite. Located in a modern building, it combines convenience to two car lines with the quiet afforded by that section.

An automatic elevator took me to the fifth floor. I entered a large reception foyer. Oblong in shape, it is adequate for dining purposes, or large enough for an extra studio couch. The good-sized living room off to the right commands a panoramic view. Its kraftex walls and the ivory woodwork lend a neutral background for furniture.

COOLIDGE CORNER

On Beacon Street, just above Coolidge Corner, I happened upon a very attractive apartment with a Pullman kitchenette. It seems the ideal solution for the work-a-day couple who do a minimum amount of housekeeping.

GOVERNORS GROUP

In Allston there is a group of nine buildings catering to tenants of two-room apartments. Each building is named for an early New England Governor. It is a splendid example of how an older building can be transformed to meet today's requirements. I saw a third floor apartment. One enters a good-sized reception hall; to the left is the chamber, apart from the rest of the suite, while the living room with the kitchenette unit are to the right of the entering foyer.

KENMORE SQUARE

An unusual apartment from the standpoint of price and location is one in the heart of Kenmore Square commanding a view of the city and giving a glimpse of the Charles. The apartment I saw is in one of the older buildings, which has always been utilized for professional purposes, but which has just recently been transformed for residential use in response to the great demand for suites in that vicinity. I saw a one, two and three-room apartment. The rentals range from $35 to $50 monthly.

MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE

Another remodelled apartment building which should challenge the interest of anyone searching for a smal suite is one situated in the Massachusetts Avenue section very near the Fenway. I saw a three-room apartment listed at $45 that offers a living room, two chambers and a kitchenette.

I stepped directly into the living room. Its southwest wnidows are over nearby roofs and guarantee a maximum emount of breeze with a minimum amount of noise. The cream and buff color scheme enhhances the size of the room itself.

A hall leading from the living room admits to the very large bathroom which gleams with new features. One chamber also leads from the hall. Oistribution of wal lspace is good and a clothing closet opens from one side.

FENWAY SECTION

In the Fenway I saw a large one-room apartment with kitchenette-dinette and equipped with an ina-door bed for the very moderate rental of $35. A two-room apartment in the same building on the third floor is available for $55. This is one of the most modern of the Fenway apartments and the tile entrances and rubber tile corridors add decided ignity to the entering foyer.

NAGGING MOTHERS BLAMED FOR MISSING GIRLS

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE

The "nagging" self-pitying, opinionated mother is a 1934 reason for "missing girls."

She is part of the home menace that pushes girls out into an unsympathetic world.

It is an unkind indictment to make of some parents, but it is too true, maintains Miss McAuliffe of the Bureau of Criminal Investigation of the Boston police department.

On t h ePolicewoman McAuliffe police blotter where the disappearance of youg girls is noted, the 'nagging" mother is held to be as much, if not more, responsible for the unaccounted absence of her daughter as any other evil force.

Miss McAuliffe has met many such mothers—parents who weep convulsively over the wrong that their daughters have done them; parents who fail to realize that companionship is not achieved through tryannical domination of a child but only through comforting understanding and a broad friendship.

ABUSED MOTHERS NAMED

Most always, Miss McAuliffe has found, these mothers consider themselves abused, although it is they who lack insight into the changing needs of a growing girl in this day and age. And as many times, they are over-indulgent about other things.

In today's interview, the woman detective reaches out to those unfortunate mothers in a sympathetic outline of the problem. Miss McAuliffe says:

"Since starting this series of articles some of my friends have questioned me about the article in which I stated that one of the chief causes for girls running away can be found in the home where there is no real family life and where a misunderstanding, 'nagging' mother holds sway.

"I want to tell you today about Janet, a Boston girl, who illustrates the point perfectly.

"Janet lived in one of the smart sections of Boston. Her mother was a well-to-do widow, owning her own home and she had a comfortable income.

"Apparently, Janet had everything that the ordinary girl could wish for. Her mother put her through high school, dressed her well and to the best of her ability did everything that a loving mother is supposed to do. But she lacked just one thing—and it was that which gave her many unhappy and anxious hours and eventually caused her to lose her pretty daughter.

IN WITH WRONG SET

"Janet got in with the wrong set in her section of the city. There were flighty girls several years older than Janet, who thought week-end trips to New Haven and New York were good fun.

"These girls induced Janet to go along. Janet's mother knew the companions of her daughter were not the right sort, but she thought it quite all right, and that nothing harmful would come out of the trips.

"Instead of questioning the girl gently about the purpose of these trips, she nagged Janet about the social standing, social prestige, income and the like of the companions she met through these out-of-town visits.

"What Janet's mother didn't question her about was the character of the men she met on these trips, for Janet's mother knew only of the superficial things. Well Janet did meet men, but they were men of the wrong type. And she did not tell her mother of these acquaintances. What happened on those larks, she kept to herself.

FOUND AT FINE HOTEL

"Then, without warning, Janet disappeared. Then the mother woke up. Frantic telegrams were sent to New York. Finally she called in the police. I got the entire story from the mother. But even as she sorrowed about the disappearance of her girl, the dominant theme of her conversation was built around. 'How could Janet be so ungrateful . . . All that I have done for that girl . . . To shame me this way . . . oh, how can I ever face my friends and such disgrace . . .'

"In New York, I learned that Janet had been found at one of the best hotels in the city—one where no 'funny business' is tolerated. There this girl of 19 had established herself in a two-room suite and was busily engaged seeking employment. Seeking a regular job, if you please, one paying big money. She had adorned the walls of the two rooms with a dozen, neat, little pictures and was in a fair way to make it look like home.

"'Well, youngster,' I said, 'what about it? Tell me the story.' And she did. The girl spoke calmly: 'My mother isn't a companion. I am well educated and I know that there is a whole lot of life that I will never encounter if I stay at home with my mother. She will not talk to me as I feel a mother should. She nags constantly, refusing to see the things in life as I have seen them.'

ADMITS WRONG START

"My mother will not listen to me when I attempt to tell her of them. I am starving to death at home for real companionship. Oh, she loves me, I admit. But there is something besides love. I admit I have started off wrong. I did. But it wasn't as bad as you think. I borrowed the money from a man friend. He just wanted to let me have a try at life on my own. I am going to get a job. I can do big things if I have the opportunity."

"I told her that her mother wanted her back. Janet didn't want to go back, but I took her. Temporarily, in the press of other activities, I forgot about Janet, whom I had last seen safely at home with her loving, but uncompanionable mother.

"A short time ago I was walking along Fifth avenue in New York. I stopped to look at a particularly glittering window display in one of the large shop windows. Some one touched me on the shoulder and said: 'Aren't you that lady detective?' Yes, it was Janet.

"Well, Janet had left her mother and Boston and had gone to New York. This time for good. I asked her what she was doing. She looked like a changed girl. She had an air of distinction. She carried herself well. There was an aura of refinement and culture about her that was undeniable. I was happy to see her that way.

JUST A LUCKY GIRL

"She told me: 'I'm chief paymaster's clerk in one of New York's big manufacturing institutions. I'm getting $200 a month already, and there is no limit to my possibilities. Isn't New York a wonderful city?'

"You see, Janet had made good. Her mother had finally seen the light and Janet is no longer listed as missing. She happens to be one of the lucky girls who trick it right.

"But where there is one Janet, I am sorry to say that there are dozens of Gretas, Bessies and Coras and Violets of whom we never get a trace. And scores of them have left home for the same reason that sent Janet out into the world."

Byrd Hut Cleared of Fumes by New Ventilators

Little America, Antarctica, Aug. 23 (Via MacKay Radio)—Although confined most of the time to his bunk in the buried shack at Bolling advance weather base, Admiral Richard E. Byrd is showing good progress toward recovery and is able to take a short walk each day, Dr. Thomas C. Poulter reported.

How long it will be before Admiral Byrd will be able to make the 125-mile return journey over the Ross Barrier to Little America remained uncertain.

Dr. Poulter, second in command of the Byrd Expedition, and head of the tractor party which reached the admiral last week after four and a half months of complete isolation, reported a new ventilator had been installed in the tunnel from which the shack draws its fresh air. He said that by carefully watching the stove a good supply of fresh air is obtained.

Fumes from the stove and from oil lamps were what made Admiral Byrd ill during his long isolation.

RICHARD BONELLI FORSAKES OPERA FOR LEAD IN "ENTER MADAME" FILM

Lights and Shadows

By

—George Holland—

There's an actor in town whose name won't be mentioned, although perhaps he wouldn't object if it was, who bears the reputation of being the best liar in the ranks of the Actors' Equity Association. Louise Caldwell, the capable young actress who has been working at the Wharf Theater, Provincetown, for the past few weeks, had your correspondent in nothing less tight than stitches early today when she and Don Rowan were recounting the highlights of the aforementioned actor's experiences with the Texas Rangers.

Louise Caldwell

This gentleman of the sock and buskin was so sure of himself and his various audiences that he became the hero of every adventure of Ranger lore ever told, including the one about answering single-handed a riot call and silencing citizens anxious about a possible need for reinforcements with the assurance: "There's only one riot, one Ranger is enough."

So he got away with homicide among the awed tenderfeet peopling the various Shubert operettas which gave him several years of gainful employment. One night he met Damon Runyon, or so Miss Caldwell tells it.

"And after you captured the eight bandits," Damon began, as he went to work on the hambo, "what did you do?"

"Why— I—" —

"Don't tell me, I know," the Runyon replied. "You snatched eight Tiller girls out of the gaping crowd and slapped seven of them across the faces of the bandits, missing one.

"Seven of the bandits went down with broken jaws and the other was gasping 'Ah!' But were you satisfied? No. Before you gave it up you made the standing bandit say: 'Doctor, I don't want my tonsils out, and anyway ——' "

Then Paul Lannin, the Boston composer, who was one of the party, spoke up.

"Don't argue with him, Damon," Paul protested. "I think the guy's a liar."

A telegram from Helen Deutsch, the press-agent who wrote "Love On An Island," a show Boston may see this winter, contains the information that the Theater Guild and the Group Theater have combined their respective subscription seasons, and the Plymouth Theater will house the six plays chosen from the combined output. "Ah! Wilderness," is the first Theater Guild offering scheduled for Boston, and, although the play has been made into a picture already released, "Men in White," a Group Theater project, will probably be the second.

Alice Gentle, the former Metropolitan singer, is in town. So is her clever son, Bruce Macfarlane the actor. Together last night they were present at the Cocoanut Grove when Ranny Weeks' orchestra played "Carioca." Miss Gentle was transported 3000 miles to Hollywood to sing "Carioca" in "Flying Down to Rio." After she was transported 3000 miles back to her home in New York, she was advised that the sequence had been cut. Although Miss Gentle had sung the number beautifully, the big minds decided that a Cuban rendition was necessary, and a lass of sepia-hue and two Mexican gals were elected to do the singing. So the lovely Miss Gentle sang the song last night for her son—and he and his friends loved it.

Once in a while a new Wilton Lackaye story bobs up. New to this department is the one about Wilton and his loss of one platinum and diamond cuff link in the famous Lambs Club. Wilton very brusquely proceeded about the business of getting it back. He posted a notice on the bulletin board which read as follows:

"Lost! A platinum and diamond cuff-link. Will buy or sell. Signed: Wilton Lakaye."

Elissa Landi Is Assigned Role Opposite New Star With Elliott Nugent Directing

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Los Angeles, Aug. 23—Columbia kicked the grand opera jinx into atoms when Grace Moore warbled "Butterfly" and "Carmen" in "One Night of Love." Now all the companies have operatic ambitions. Paramount has signed Richard Bonelli, well known grand opera star, who will make his screen debut with Elissa Landi in "Enter, Madame."

"Enter, Madame" is the story of a temperamental opera singer, so an operatic score will fit nicely into the play. Miss Landi, who at one time is said to have studied for grand opera, will sing the second act from "Tosca" with Bonelli. Just so that all the effects will be correct, Armando Agnini, the stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House, will act as technical director, with Elliott Nugent directing.

Chatter in Hollywood

Carol Ann Beery, the apple of her dad's eye and photographed with Wally in hundreds of poses, is going into the movies. And is Wally happy? David Selznick and George Cukor have been looking all over Hollywood for a little girl who looks like Madge Evans as a child. Madge plays "Agnes" in "David Copperfield" and Carol Ann will play the young Agnes. Mrs. Evans produced a photograph of her daughter as a little girl and the resemblance was so striking everyone commented on it.

New York is beckoning Melvyn Douglas. The movies haven't sufficiently interested him to keep him in Hollywood. He has great plans on Broadway. Although Radio offered him a long term contract he is hurrying to New York to direct Lillian Gish in a stage play, "Of Within the Gates" (funny title). Helen Gahagan (Mrs. Douglas) is now in San Francisco playing in "Mary of Scotland" and when she finishes her engagement she will join Melvyn in New York. Later they will do a play by Dan Totheroh and George O'Neil, so you see the Douglas plans are pretty well laid out.

After an absence of 12 months Roland Young, who was in a fair way to achieve film stardom, is coming back to take up the threads of his broken screen career. He will play one of the leading character roles in Bing Crosby's next, "Lady Beware." Yes, it's the same story you know as "Sailor Beware," only purified, renovated and rewritten. Roland Young will bring plenty of comedy to the Crosby picture and that's what Frank Tuttle counted on when he mentioned his preference, for Frank directs the crooner and his cast.

Madge Evans

Am I proud? Parsons, Jr., who only yesterday it seems, was studying her lessons, has become a full-fledged director. She has signed a long-term contract with Columbia Pictures to direct, write the dialogue and produce "screen snapshots." She didn't walk right into this job by any means, for it was given her after 10 months of hard work, putting over these "screen snapshots" which show the Hollywood stars at work and play. Perhaps I sound like the proud parent, but I do think she deserves a bouquet, for her Hollywood newsreel is the only one that so far has played at first-run theaters.

Snapshots of Hollywood

JOHN EMERSON takes to the air and flies back to Hollywood with JOSEPH SCHENCK; when questioned by a friend in New York, SCHENCK admitted he was very happy over his engagement to MERLE OBERON; MAURICE LE BLANC, author of "Arsene Lupin," thriller, in Hollywood a guest of the ROBERT FLOREYS; MEM LE BLANC getting a glimpse of Hollywood at Sardi's, where he lunched with friends; JAMES CAGNEY much less temperamental since the Communist story caused so much talk; all Hollywood convinced of CAGNEY'S innocence and that his name was used without his permission; SID GRAUMAN bought dinner for his mother at a Beverly Hills cafe and LEE TRACY ditto; GRACE MOORE and VALENTINE PARERA, her favorite movie actor, dining at the Russian Eagle Gardens; WILLIAM GOETZ motoring to San Bernardino to welcome his partner, DARRYL ZANUCK who has been vacationing abroad for three months; JUNE KNIGHT becoming a real estater; happened when some easterners bought the home she was building for her parents at a profit; now she has purchased two more acres and is building another ranch house for her father and mother. That's all today. See you tomorrow!

HITLER TURNS RIFLE ON 'HIGH COUNCIL' TO DEFY ARREST

THEN DECIDES QUESTION TO CHANGE ENTIRE CAREER

The Boston Evening American today continues its series of articles on Hitler, the human question mark of Europe. Most talked of man in the world today, the dictator of Germany holds the key to the problem of war or peace in Europe. Begin the series today.

CHAPTER 10

Hitler!
Soldier starts political career!

Arm in arm with Schmiedt Ernt, war comrade, Adolf Hitler was discharged from the army in November, 1918. His eyes were much improved, but still weak, from British gas. The pair wasted no time in getting to Munich.

The soul of this man of destiny was ablaze. No crusader of the 14th century ever took lance against the heathen wtih more fire than gleamed from the tiny pupils of Hitler's narrow-slitted eyes.

He thought of those who had urged the German general strike and had thrown "The Fatherland" into revolt. A new mission now was his; to defeat those who had betrayed the nation.

Munich, however, was vastly changed. Everywhere were the Socialists. Kurt Eisner, Jewish intellectual, was attracting great attention as a Socialist thinker and speaker. But Hitler found it hard to like him. Maybe because he wore a long beard. More likely because he was Jewish.

Eisner did not have to worry long, if at all, about what Hitler thought of him. For, on a crisp February morning in 1919, Eisner was shot dead.

The Communists also were very active. On the final day in February those in Munich declared a dictatorship of the Red army. The army did not materialize, however. That was the end of the dictatorship. While the agitation was on, the city was in violent commotion and excitement was everywhere.

Hitler and Ernst tried to figure it all out, but made little headway. Then they both rejoined the reserve battalions of their regiments, in the hands of the "Soldiers' Council." Matters were in a very jumbled state, these two concluded. They became dissatisfied and tried to drop the affiliation.

This earned Hitler, at least, the ill-will of the Central Council, superior to the "Soldiers Council". The officers became angry! Words followed!

Uses Rifle To Balk Arrest

On the morning of March 27, 1919, the Central Council officers sent a detail of three men to arrest Hitler at his lodgings. They found him there, but if they expected to take him back with them, a surprise awaited them.

Hitler permitted them to enter and listened to what they had to say. Then, reaching for his army rifle, he told them to go about their business. Very wisely, they took his advice and no more was heard of efforts to arrest Hitler.

Having resolved to devote himself to politics, Hitler set about forming some connections. He succeeded in forming new acquaintances so well that he was appointed to a commission.

This was Hitler's first actual step into politics, and may be put down as the starting point of the vigorous campaign he had outlined for himself to return Germany to the Germans, as well as the moment from which he began his meteoric climb to world power and fame.

It also shows that he must have been above the average as a politician even then, to be able to obtain a commission appointment for himself so readily.

Hitler's idea of going into politics, then, was not to join some ready-made organization. Or one of the big parties that embraced most of the voters between them. A new party, founded upon new lines, was the thought fomenting in the back of his head.

The dictator complex which had been his since childhood was calling for expression. And he needed a vehicle where he would be supreme, to make him feel at home and develop his best talents.

So he and some friends began discussing the formation of such a project. They met mostly in beer stubes, or parlors, and would sit long over their steins as they planned.

Extreme Views Basis of Party

They called the new-born political enterprise the "Social Revolutionary Party." And they sought to engage the interest of the masses. The principles were: Extreme nationalism, anti-Communism, anti-reparations, anti-Semitism, anti-parliamentation and anti-capitalism.

It can be noted that many of the principles which Hitler embraced at this early date—anti-Semitism for one—have been carried through to the present, although the name of the party and other details of his political outlook have changed several times.

Many persons are curious as to how Hitler came to join the "German Workers Party." It was at this time that he did so and it came about unexpectedly.

Hitler received an order one day from the military headquarters to which he was attached, to investigate a newly formed organization. For the military, after the end of the war, took a deep interest in politics. The party was the "German Workers Party." He was instructed to attend one of the meetings and make a report on what happened.

Adolf was keen for the work. The war had sharpened his mind, tempered it in the fire of blood and battle. He was a much superior thinker than when he enlisted.

And now, since swearing unswerving devotion to the cause of defeating those whom he termed the enemies of "The Fatherland," his faculties were more alert than ever. Every new political movement, theory or argument attracted him. Interested him. And, in many cases, aroused his suspicions.

The "German Workers' Party fell into the last classification. He had heard of it. And when he received the order to investigate it, was pleased.

The meeting he attended progressed nearly to the finish. When a "professor" rose to speak. He had a plan for cutting Bavaria loose from Prussia.

Hitler Chases Professor Out

Hitler listened to him, for Bavaria and its problems had always been close to his heart. Then he interrupted the speaker, took the platform and so uncovered the futility of the plan the "professor" had in mind that the latter ran out of the building.

Hitler's ability to talk had won for him quite as much as had his arguments. The same as it had done when thel boys threatened to thrash him years before in Linz.

Next day, imagine his surprise, when he received an invitation to join the "German Workers." At a special meeting to be attended by the President.

Hitler attended. And was startled when he found "herr president" to be none other than the "professor" whom he had bested in argument a week previously.

The "professor" had purposely sought Hitler as a member because Hitler had been able to out-talk him. He congratulated the former soldier, praised his oratory and told him he had never before met anybody who could best him in an argument.

Hitler then made some inquiries regarding the new organization. And found the "German Workers" had no program, literature, plans or outline. But it did have a desire to do something. And showed evidences of having the will to carry it out. He liked that.

Also he liked its smallness. Only six members. In his eyes it seemed an advantage that this band had not developed into an "organization." As it was, it offered an opportunity for individual personal activity. Something the big parties accorded to only a few well-known persons at the top.

Unprepared as the "German Workers" were for any action, it was still possible to shape the methods, character and objectives of their activities. He would like to do that. He would like to lead them. Lead a new movement. The leader or dictator complex was astir in him.

He turned this over in his mind. And the more he did so, the more firm became the conviction that it would be some such small movement as this which would redeem Germany. That would take her out of the control of those into whose hands she had been betrayed. That would perform the national resurrection.

He delayed joining. He wanted to think. For two days and nights he meditated.

Big Question of Life Before Him

This was his opportunity, he thought. His opportunity to join an lead a new movement. Its principles were the same as those of the "Social Revolutionary Party" which he had started. The two could be combined. And he could be the leader. He could stand out. He could distinguish himself. He could win fame and power.

The big decision of his life was before him. It could not be avoided. All night he walked the streets, thinking.

When daylight came he had settled it. There was no turning back. His hour had come.

Hitler went to the home of the Herr President and joined the "German Workers."

He was given a number. It was seven.

Read in tomorrow's Boston Evening American how Hitler's little party grew by leaps and bounds under his guidance.

MAD MILLIONS---By Charles Grant

SYNOPSIS

Young and pretty Cathleen McCarthy, secretary to the wealthy Jasper Ingram, attracts her employer's son, Seward. Realizing the difference in their social positions, Cathleen discourages Seward's attentions, but he is persistent and she finally makes an appointment with him. He presents her with an expensive bracelet, which Cathleen plans to return, but the gift disappears from her dresser. Marian Alspaugh, frivolous wife of Homer Alspaugh, Ingram's confidential secretary, becomes infatuated with the Marques d'Alhues. She buys a new car to impress the marques, and the first time she takes him out in it they have an accident and the car is destroyed.

CHAPTER XV

On recent occasions, Opportunity had again presented herself. Had Alspaugh at such time acted on inside knowledge, he would, he realized now, have made a killing. His caution, born of the small man's timidity, had stoppepd him. His inside knowledge had never been sufficiently fool proof to exercise the blood-chilling specter of possible loss. Obviously Homer was not a sport. He would gamble on a certainty, but on nothing else.

Fluctuating thus between avarice and terror, he watched, with boundless admiration and envy, the magnificent plunging of his chief. Superbly indifferent to economic maxims and a tottering financial structure, Ingram was gambling his fortune on new ventures and an expanding dream.

He seemed able to smell out, among a hundred toppling enterprises, the one that could be captured and remuneratively reorganized. Lumping it with a score of others and capitalizing them all again from above, he would reap a fantastic return for his investment. Alspaugh, who observed every step of the process, could no more have emulated it than he could have repeated the weight-lifting feats of a strong man at a fair.

HEARS OF ACCIDENT

Alspaugh had to leave his private figuring and answer his telephone which was buzzing insistently. He picked up the receiver with one eye on the disturbing sheet of figures beside it. They turned to a mere blur as an excited voice told him:

"Mrs. Alspaugh has been in an automobile accident—"

He choked, his heart beating painfully in his narrow breast. At once, though, came the blessed reassurance:

"She's not badly hurt. A slight concussion, the doctor says—"

Jasper Ingram, sympathetic and human, as always in his relations with the people close to him, offered his speedboat for Alspaugh's dash out to the Memorial Hospital where Marian had been taken.

D'Alhues, his right arm in a sling, joined them.

At sight of him Alspaugh had visions of a damage suit brought by this passenger. "I'm awfully sorry. I do hope you're not seriously hurt. Anything I can do—"

D'Alhues was not a Spanish nobleman for nothing. He bowed impressively to the man whose dearest possession he planned to steal and said:

EXPRESSES REGRET

"It is nothing. It is my sole regret that I was not the unique sufferer. That the delicate and fragile beauty of the Senora, your wife, should incur injury—that is devastating!

The marques drew particular satisfaction from the assurance, renewed for his benefit, that Marian's face would not be marked, and he smiled brilliantly on Homer. "So all is well that ends well! I shall light candles for this—a great mercy!"

"I don't understand how the accident happened," Alspaugh said. "Marian is really an excellent and careful driver."

"The accident was entirely my fault," declared d'Alhues with superb chivalry. "I made an unfortunate suggestion, and in trying to comply with it—too late—the catastrophe occurred. I shall blame myself to my last hour."

Homer, able at last to control his trembling fingers, lighted the cigar he so badly needed. After saying that, he thought, the fellow can't very well bring suit.

The financial consequences of Marian's morning activities were rather appalling. The car, wrecked beyond repair, would still have to be paid for. Marian's hospital bill would be more than a trifle.

Unfortunately he made the mistake of telling her what he had done.

DRIVEN TO GAMBLE

"I'll want an evening dress the minute I am fit to look at, won't I? And I was just crazy about that one. Now they'll sell it to somebody else—You promised to give it to me. If you don't tell them to send it straight back I'll know it's because that doctor tells you I'll always be a perfect fright."

"There, there, now. I'll get your the dress. I'll have 'em send it here to the hospital so you can see it," he promised.

Some men are born gamblers, others are driven to gambling by the pressure of desperate need. Alspaugh's debts were cumulative.

His troubles were increased the morning Holbrook joined him in the commuters' train and made a worried confession. He was in deep waters himself. The arrangement about the car hadn't been exactly businesslike. Friendship was friendship, but suppose the situation took a turn where Homer would be dealing, not with him, but with his creditors? He felt terribly about it, but Alspaugh ought to know that it looked as if he might have to pay for the car in a lump after all! If that became necessary, Homer saw it would bankrupt him.

The thing to be done was so obvious that presently Homer, frightened of speculation as he was, seriously considered taking the plunge.

"If I could lay my hands on two or three thousand dollars," he thought, "I could clean up enough to get square with the world!" The difficulty was that he had, after paying for Marian's evening dress and hospital expenses, less than a hundred dollars in the bank.

Having no money of his own with which to speculate, it is hardly surprising that almost at once he found himself toying with the idea of risking money that was not is. Of course he wouldn't lay down a dollar except on a sure thing. Well, then, if he should walk out in his lunch hour and cash a check on that private account of Ingram's which stood in Homer's name, why could he not use that money to buy stock? It was practically certain that he would be able to replace the money in less than two weeks.

This private, and hidden, account was never audited. Once in a great while, Ingram asked to see the balance sheet, which Homer always had ready for him. Usually about a hundred thousand dollars was carried in this account. In general, checks were drawn on it only in favor of Miss Virginia Russell. Lately, however, a big one had gone to Mrs. Agatha Chane. Alspaugh wasn't sure who these women were, but he had his suspicions.

Traffic Rules for Pushcarts

By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER

By this time you know all about a pedlar sticking up an armored car with a pushcart.

A Manhattan pedlar's license is only $10 a year. So we figure he made close to $427,000 on the deal. That violates the NRA code for pushcarts.

Do you remember the prison riots last week? The boys were mad because they couldn't get out and grab a piece of this job.

The police are looking for the pedlar out at sea. Maybe he is going to enter the pushcart in the big yacht races.

From now on our traffic cops will be pretty strict on pushcarts that don't stop for red lights.

But, we will get that guy when he comes in to have his license renewed.

Listen World! ÷ Putting on an Act

By ELSIE ROBINSON

Getting along with other people; getting past that wall of strangeness which seems to surround them . . . there's the hardest job you have to tackle. And unless you can manage it, you'll be an embittered, lonely failure all your days.

Elsie Robinson

But how can it be managed. Some people seem to mix so easily! There must be a trick to it.

There is—a trick that begins in your own mind. If you want to get next to the other fellow, you must realize first of all that there's really no "wall of strangeness" around him. The wall is in you, yourself . . . in your own ignorance and fear . . . your own secret feeling that you're "different."

We all have that feeling when we're young. What a liar that chap was who said that youth was the most carefree time in life! Actually, youth is the most bewildered, embarrassed and generally harassed period in our existence.

AT SEVENTEEN

I remember how it was with myself at seventeen. A gawky, gangly girl, always falling over my own feet, full of fears and fizz, never knowing whether I wanted to laugh or cry, turn cartwheels, throw bricks or stalk haughtily past an unworthy world.

But of one thing I was sure—I must put on an act. I must never, never let other people know how I felt . . . never let them guess how close tears lay beneath my cocky smile; how cold was the fear behind my impudent swagger; what depths of loneliness and hurt were masked by my temper and snootiness!

They must never know, because if they did they couldn't possibly understand. And they'd jeer, or scold, or pity, or take advantage, and make life even harder to bear.

They "couldn't understand." I was so sure of that—so sure that no one else felt as I did, that no one else hid such a tangled, tempestuous life beneath a laughing mask.

I must put on an act. That was my first lesson in grown-up behavior.

It was a lonely business at first. It formed that "wall of strangeness" which shut me away, and which I blamed on the other fellow. But at last the wall went down. It went down under the crashing discovery that everyone else was putting on an act, too!

CAME SLOWLY

That discovery didn't happen in a dramatic second. I didn't learn it from books, nor was it revealed in sermons.

It came slowly, over long intervals, as I went along, living with other people, working, playing, fighting, grieving, dreaming, fearing with them—sharing my life with them as they shared theirs with me.

We began putting on that act as children to protect our young vanity and fear. And some sick souls retained it always for that same reason. But healthier spirits went on wearing wise, strong, cheerful masks, out of civilized consideration for the other fellow.

Getting along with other humans . . . getting past their strangeness . . . getting next to the secret places of their lives . . . is the hardest yet the most necessary job we all must tackle. But it will not be hard when once you've learned that universal secret—

We're all putting on an act.

Just as there is a sob behind YOUR smile . . . a grin behind YOUR frown . . . hunger behind YOUR sneer . . . hurt behind YOUR anger . . . fear behind YOUR arrogance . . . and a need for loving kindness beneath every act or mood . . . so it is with the Other Fellow.

You're not "different"—nor is he. And he'll give you all he has, including himself, if you'll just remember that fact.

WHEN THE SWEET STRAINS of the Lohengrin Wedding March echo through the little church of St. Johns' in Beverly Farms at high noon this day, Miss Hortense Clementine Head Clark walks down the aisle on the arm of her father, Mr. Henry Cannon Clark, in a trailing gown of bridal satin designed by Hickson . . . fashioned on bouffant lines with leg o' mutton sleeves, with high neckline and pleated chiffon yoke, her veil a short one covering her face and encircling her brow with two narrow bands of the satin caught with orange blossoms, orchids showering her bouquet, she will be the picture of the bride of 1934.

OPEN SEASON FOR SOUTHERN FRIED CHICKEN AND GOLDEN CORN FRITTERS

Given in Marriage

By Adele Garrison

Dickey, ill at ease, tries to tactfully explain the grievance voiced against Madge by his business partner, Edith Fairfax.

CHAPTER 122

ALL THIS tenderness, all the charity of my mood engendered by Dicky's caresses and his loverlike compliments, fled incontinently at his request to "straighten out Ede" for him.

I had known that something disagreeable was crowding to his lips when he came into my room. And this was it—the necessity for quelling a temperamental tantrum of the woman who for so many years had been anathema to me, despite the outward amity between us, because of the hopeless love for Dicky which I knew had consumed her since her first association with him.

"What? Again!" I exclaimed, forgetting the suspicion that perhaps Dicky's caresses and tenderness had been but a pretense designed to put me in good humor for his introduction of the question concerning Edith Fairfax. "Whatever's getting into Ede, anyway? She didn't use to be so temperamental. She never has used me as an excuse before. Did I hear you aright when you said that she won't come to the wedding because she knows I don't want her here?"

MADGE "DOESN'T WANT HER"

"Your hearing was perfect, as usual," he said with a wry grin. "At that, maybe, she's been keen enough to get an inkling of the truth—that you don't want her here any more than I do."

I was so startled that I forgot to be cautious.

"Any more than you do!" I repeated.

Dicky drew his eyebrows into a portentous frown.

"Don't tell me that's astonishment you're registering," he said, a bit unpleasantly.

"It certainly is," I told him spiritedly. "You never before have given the impression that—"

"That I wasn't anxious for the fair Edith's company, in and out of season, I suppose?" he said with a grin.

"All this is beside the point," I said. "Let's agree that we neither of us want her here, but that for the sake of conventions, old friendship, to say nothing of the speech of people, she ought to be present at every social function we give."

EDITH'S GRIEVANCE

"Now just what do you mean by that, I wonder," Dicky said.

"Exactly what I said," I retorted. "Don't try to go beyond the returns. Just tell me what you want me to do. Or first, do you know just what particular grievance Edith has against me?"

To my astonishment I saw a brick red flush steal upward from his neck.

"I can't tell you exactly, because she didn't tell me outright, of course. She knows I wouldn't listen to any spiel of hers against you. But she ripped out something about trying to do you a good turn, and your turning her down. Then she followed it up by saying there was no use pretending any longer; you didn't like seeing her—"

"Any more than she liked seeing me?" I inquired.

"Something to that effect," he said, the brick-red flush increasing.

"Would you like to have me tell you just what was the nature of the 'good turn' she was endeavoring to do me?" I asked; and then recoiled at the pitfall into which I had so nearly fallen. I should put myself upon the level of Edith, the talebearer, were I to retail to Dicky what Edith had said of the mysterious "Floss," even if I could have done the thing unthinkable to me by taxing my husband concerning this unknown girl.

NOT A TALE-BEARER

With a rush I flung myself across the room at him and gripped his arm.

"Please, please, Dicky, consider that unsaid," I pleaded. "I must have been mad to say anything like that. I am not a tale-bearer. It is all only a lot of nonsense of Edith's, anyway. What do you think I would better do? There isn't time to write her. Shall I get her on the telephone, and try to straighten her out?"

Dicky looked at me queerly.

"I wonder," he said, and instinctively I knew that he did not mean my last question, but was commenting upon my conclusion that it was only a lot of nonsense upon Edith's part. Then he shook himself exactly, I told myself, as might an uncomfortable puppy, which had been exposed to a heavy shower.

"I suppose a telephone would be best," he said. "But remember; don't do it because I ask you."

Frying Chickens Are at Their Plumpest, and Corn Is at Peak of Crop

By Martha Lee

WITH PLUMP kernels on roasting ears simply bursting with juicy sweetness these late summer days, fried chicken practically demands corn fritters as an escort. A tender juicy drumstick or a meaty breast should feel literally all puffed up when accompanied by the golden lightness of corn fritters.

It was in the Old South, with its early traditions of fine living that corn fritters and fried chicken were first combined. Never was a happier combination invented. A century of progress has been achieved, and skillets and pans and ranges have been mightily improved. But so far as we are able to learn, no one has been able to improve on fried chicken when accompanied by corn fritters.

The best chickens for frying are meaty young cockerels which have grown to 2½ to 3½ pound size. When they have reached this size they have deposited enough fat under the skin and between the tiny muscles to make the cooked meat lusciously juicy.

Whether the pieces are dipped in seasoned flour, cornmeal, sifted bread crumbs or not dipped at all, the cooked chicken will be most tender and juicy if it is cooked at a low temperature. There is an old French saying, "Let the fire do its part," and that applies in cooking chicken. Most good things take time to cook. From half to three-quarters of an hour is none too long to fry a chicken. The meatier the pieces the longer the time required.

Any kind of frying pan will do for frying chicken, but the regular chicken fryers are especially convenient. They are deep, and their heavy, tight lids keep in all the steam and flavor and aroma. Such a fryer is a piece of equipment that will find many uses in the household even when frying chicken is transformed to roasting chicken.

The fluffiest and lightest kind of corn fritters are those which are fried in deep fat, but the kind which are fried in a skillet—really sauteed instead of fried—are popular, too, especially if they are fried in the same fat in which the chicken was fried. Here is a good way to put the fritter mixture together. To make the skillet-fried kind, merely add another fourth of a cup of flour.

1 cup flour
½ tsp. baking powder
1½ cups fresh corn cut from cob
2 eggs
¾ cup milk
1 tbsp. melted fat

Sift flour, salt and baking powder together. Add eggs beaten with milk and stir in corn and melted fat. Drop by spoonfuls into deep fat which has been heated to 365-375 deg. F. or hot enough to brown an inch cube of bread in 60 seconds. Fry until golden brown. Drain and serve hot.

Fall Color Tips For Men

By ANNICE BRINK

COLOR ENSEMBLE sketches for various types of men, as outlined by Mr. Malcolm L. Harvey, Park street advertising designer, were given in part last Thursday on this page. Two types of blond man, and the medium complexioned with brown were listed. Today the remaining types are given the following hints.

MEDIUM COMPLEXION—BLUE OR GREEN EYES

Medium gray suit with a darker pencil stripe; white shirt with crinkle tie in solid color [illegible] brilliant blue, lighter than royal, or tan shirt, plain or figured, with blue, white and red striped tie, black shoes, straight brimmed light gray hat.

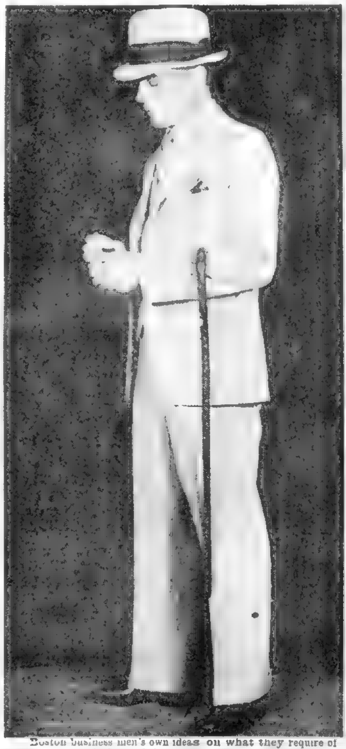
DARK COMPLEXION—BLUE EYES

A tweedy gray sports suit is recommended, with a tie of lively pattern, perhaps blue and white striped, with a white shirt or a striped blue and white shirt with a medium dark blue solid color tie; or a bow tie striped in white or red and black with a white shirt, black shoes and a very light gray hat with a wavy brim.

DARK COMPLEXION—BROWN EYES

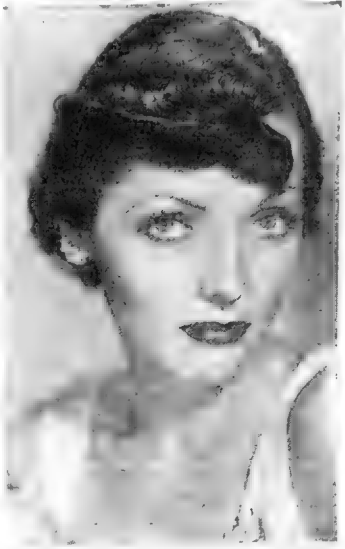
A very light gray suit is becoming; choose a close patterned shirt, blue on a white background, a black, red and white striped tie, black shoes, light gray snap brim hat. Or with the same suit choose a rough textured white shirt, a solid middy blue tie with another color in diagonal stripes.

Latest in Fall Wear for Men

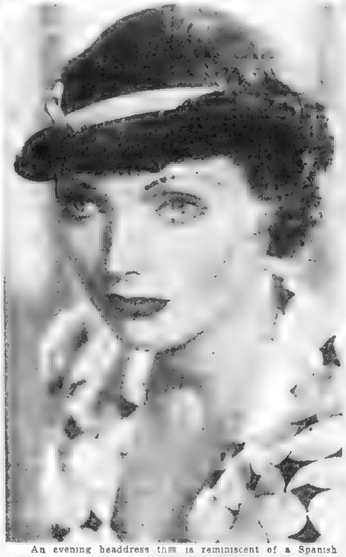


Boston business men's own ideas on what they require of a smart town suit directed the design, shown on Mr. Malcolm L. Harvey. It is a traditional favorite on State street. Note the patch pockets, the freedom at the waistline, the general air of easy and loungy comfort. Welted seams are used. A gray snap brim hat, blue and maroon striped tie, shirt with the new blunter collar point, and black shoes with a simple stitched line on the hard cap are correct with this type of suit. For further details, phone the Fashion Editor, LIBerty 4000, or write in care of the Boston Evening American.

Unusual Versions of Bangs Make for Fetching Glances



Sleek and shiny as a black, modernistic vase is this striking version of the stylized hairdress for formal fall occasions, as modeled by Adrienne Ames, Hollywood star. The back is tightly curled in ringlets which clear the hair line. A deep wave manages to touch, but not cover, the top of the ear and an exaggerated sweep of bangs forms a delightfully rolled curl which crosses the forehead.



An evening headdress that is reminiscent of a Spanish matador's hat, is Hollywood's newest offering to fashion's scrap book. The hair is waved down over the brows and curled upward at the ends, forming a soft roll around the head. It is held in place by a narrow band of grosgrain ribbon, which ties in a bow over the right eye. A row of soft curls across the back complete the coiffure. Adrienne Ames models.

Forbidden Lead That Defeated Opponents' Spade Slam

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

One of the [illegible] of Bridge [illegible] axioms [illegible] own purpose when they are taken too literally, but perhaps just as the best way to fight poison may be with more poison, the best way to counteract axioms may be with more axioms—or perhaps it's just a neat axiom, anyway—

This statement is quite true,
Although
It sounds just like a whopper.
The proper lead against a
Slam
Is often most improper.

On today's hand the West player committed the "unpardonable" sin of leading away from a King-Jack tenace but in so doing found the only way of defeating the opponents' Slam.

South Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

North: ♠ K 8 ♡ A 9 2 ◇ Q J 7 ♣ A Q J 9 8
West: ♠ 9 6 2 ♡ K J 8 ◇ 10 6 4 2 ♣ 4 3 2
East: ♠ 7 4 3 ♡ Q 7 6 4 3 ◇ 9 3 ♣ K 7 5
South: ♠ A Q J 10 5 ♡ 10 5 ◇ A K 8 5 ♣ 10 6

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	3 N T	Pass
4 ◇	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
4 N T	Pass	5 N T	Pass
6 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

The North and South bidding was correct in every particular. South decided that even though the key cards were located a Grand Slam contract would be inadvisable as there seemed to be some doubtful spots in the side suits. Admittedly, a double dummy inspection of the North and South hands would indicate that a contract of either five or seven (and not six) should be reached, as if the club finesse wins seven can be made and with the club finesse losing, six can be defeated.

However, the added factor that with any other Opening lead but a heart a Small Slam can be made whether or not the club finesse works, suggests a Small Slam contract as a sound and conservative one.

The West player was on lead against the final contract of six spades, and naturally did not see the other three hands.

He only heard the bidding as it was recounted above, and assuming that the North and South bids were honest, he decided upon the heart lead as the only hope. West's own diamond holding indicated that a diamond lead up to the Declarer could avail little, that a trump lead was far too passive a course to adopt and that a club lead would only do for the Declarer what he would eventually have to do himself. West reasoned that the only hope of defeating the contract was for him and his partner to set up a heart trick before East got in with a possible trump trick or club trick, and that if East could not get in, the contract could not be defeated anyway.

West further decided from the bidding that whatever heart strength was held by North and South was probably located in the Dummy, so a heart Opening would not sacrifice a trick which the Declarer could not win by himself. West opened a low heart rather [illegible] Ace and [illegible]

[illegible] heart lead South's perfectly sound contract was doomed to defeat. South had to go up with the Ace of hearts on the first trick and when the club finesse lost East returned a heart and put the Declarer down one trick. With any other lead but a heart the time factor would have swung over to the Declarer's side and he would have been able to set up his clubs before the defense could set up their heart trick.

Unnecessary Embarrassment May Be Caused by Letter

By MRS. BECKMAN

Dear Mrs. Beckman:

May I ask your kind assistance in [illegible] a man who was [illegible] influence on my behalf? About four months ago he introduced my application to the head of a firm in the city in the hope of my getting a position. I have been sick for some time since and if he called, I did not get the message.

I do not want to appear bold or a nuisance, though I am very much in need of work, but I would like to know how he was received even if I did not have any luck.

READER.

I am not sure but that it wouldn't be kinder of you not to write this letter to this gentleman who has tried to be so helpful about getting you a position. Don't you think that it might embarrass him?

If there had been any good news for you, any favorable reaction to his request to the head of the firm, he would of course have communicated it to you. And knowing that you were so anxious to get a position, he would have taken some more definite means of getting in communication with you (such as a telegram), if he had felt that there was a possibility of his message having miscarried.

Of course I grant you that it would have been nicer if he had written you or told you that there was no possibility of having a position with that firm. But since he didn't, I don't think that you should force him to do what he apparently didn't want to do and doesn't want to do. I don't wish in the least possible way to be unkind, but I do think that your writing this letter would be a bit in the form of a "nuisance," which you say you don't wish to be.

I wish, so much, that I could be of more definite help, but I am being very honest and sincere, and I feel that if you should write this letter you might foil any further attempts that this man might make on your behalf, and I wouldn't want you to do that.

Color Chart Is Best Make-Up Guide

By Juliet Shelby

ONE OF OUR suppressed desires has always been to have golden hair and wear flaming colors, an impossible but fascinating contemplation. Blondes as a rule [illegible] find it difficult to wear bright colors as their delicate beauty [illegible] apt to pale by fabrics that are [illegible] startling [illegible] contrast.

[illegible] had to adapt their clothes to their natural coloring and [illegible] the golden or ebony tints of their hair [illegible] the color accents in their appearance.

Today when we speak of the art of make-up we mean the [illegible] and pleasing effects we can produce with cosmetics. Makeup can be of tremendous importance to a girl in the business world or in social life.

Let us take, for example, the girl with the [illegible] face and short neck. Her [illegible]

It is quite true that she cannot journey to Hollywood to learn how [illegible] can change one's physiognomy, but she can help things a lot by deft use of powder and rouge.

By placing rouge close to the nose and then powdering the face all over with a light ivory tone a round face can be made to appear thin. Over the ivory tone powder a dark, warm tone should be applied to the sides of the face and neck. Begin in front of the ears and let it come below the cheek bone.

Never, under any circumstance, apply rouge to the ears. It always makes the face appear shorter and besides is an old-fashioned make-up. The coiffure for the round face should be planned on [illegible] with soft flat waves over the sides.

Eyebrows should be kept narrow, and a violet shade of eye-shadow used. To give the eyes an almond shape, draw a line with the eye pencil from the outer corners towards the temples.

Clever and subtle changes of make-up will effect a change in any costume. Take beige for instance, worn by a woman with gray hair. Without make-up no two combinations could be worse. That is why so many kindred brown tones are shunned by women with graying locks. And yet with proper make-up it could be another story entirely.

When very dark powder is used with dark eyes, let the color note be a scarlet lip rouge. Cheek rouge is not necessary. When wearing pastel shades the eyes must be made up lightly. Gray and brown and violet are the favorite shades. Experiment with different colors of eye makeup and see which is most becoming to your type. Some women look better with black lashes, no matter what the costume color may be.

You will find my color chart very helpful. You may have it free if you send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Juliet Shelby, Boston Evening American, Boston.

Lotion for Sun-Tan

Question: My skin, which is very fair, blisters, burns, and becomes freckled when it is exposed to the sun. What can I use for a preventive? Will a mixture of oil and vinegar help to tan my skin? E. T., Everett.

Answer: A mixture of oil and vinegar used on the skin produces a tan. I suggest that you keep your skin well moistened with this solution and tan it gradually. Begin with ten minutes front and back the first day, and lengthen the sun bath period a little each day. If your skin freckles, you must protect it with a sunburn and windburn cream.

THRONGS ATTEND HERO PRIEST'S RITES

This Is Life
by
ROBERT E. ROGERS

It was Chesterton, I believe, who said that it is better to eat caviare on impulse than grapenuts on principle! Why he chose to celebrate that harmless, necessary product of Battle Creek, on which I was brought up as a child, I do not know. He apparently used it as a symbol for deliberate asceticism for the sake of one's health, in contrast with the profligate and continental caviare, always associated in the public mind with chorus girls and duchesses, champagne and truffles, and the wild debauchery which eventually destroys health and morality—not to mention the liver.

Robt. E. Rogers

Anyway, Chesterton seems to suggest that a life of sober habit, of routine utility, of unimpeachable, clockwork dependability is not always so good for a man as an occasional fling. Hence this elaborate literary reference. The Family Rogers—as the dear French put it—after some fifteen blameless years on the rock-bound coasts of Cape Ann, after filling a permanent summer home with the accumulations of husbandry and houswifry largely junk, but such precious and useful junk as ancient raincoats, hammocks like torn mackerel nets, copies of Liberty for the year 1927, the old iron bed the maid used to sleep in before she broke it down, et cetera, et cetera—after making a home in short, in Rockport, like the scriptural conies who dwell among the rocks, the Family Rogers now finds itself on the wide and sandy beaches of New Hampshire.

What Fate, Destiny, Kismet or Karma led us here we know not, save that one day motoring along the seashore from Portsmouth to Newburyport we saw an empty shack and a familiar sign. Last year such signs were out like a rash all along a coastline of empty houses. This year they seem hopefully few. Anyway, a miraculous contact with the busy gentleman who sells and rents cottages, a brief and laconic confab, and an excited return to the old Bay State. A hurried packing of a few essentials, just enough to fill a small truck—mostly kitchen things, for no 'furnished cottage" ever had any thing but the fewest and most battered and blackened ironmongery—a hurried attempt to stop the milk, ice, mail, garbage collection and the like—and here we are, north-northeast-by-east from Governor Fuller's and west-southwest-by-north of the Isle of Shoals, within easy range of the guns of the 197th Coast Artillery and in full view of the bomb dropping apparatus of the army planes, which zoom like angry hornets back and forth over our frail roof all day long.

Were a detective engaged to try to decipher the reasons for this strange and sudden hegira, he would be put to it to explain in any other words than "sand and sun," under conditions where all you have to do is to roll out of bed, off the verandah and into and onto both. The report would probably be headed "Dossier of the Family Rogers; Strange and barbarous behavior of a hitherto useful and laborious citizenry. They rise late, and after what is apparently a hasty meal and the sketchiest of oeconomy (Greek; meaning the care of the home), they lie in relaxed and sometimes ungainly postures under a broiling sun, rapidly turning from a quadroon tan to a deeper saddle-colored tint, annointed (like the Psalmist) with oil and shining (as in the old saying) like a nigger's heel. No good can come of such goings-on."

Your correspondent will report on the state of the country, i.e. New Hampshire, later. At present it is very pleasant like New York, which is great to visit but where one would not like to live all the time. I mean that in front of this simple wooden edifice in which we live there is a good deal of crushed and crumpled cement which might once have been a sea-wall. A vision flashes before the eyes of the Family Rogers crouched together on the second floor while the tips of the combers batter against the windows and the spray comes down the chimney and from below one hears the dull crash of cement sea-walls giving way. That, if you understand me, is what I mean.

But this hot and sunny morning the surf roars yet as gently as Bottom himself or any sucking dove, and about 18 different breeds and varieties and accidents of dogdom gallop up and down with the greatest friendliness. Our own protected and secluded spinster pup whines at them from behind the safe shelter of the screen door. And hundreds of children, judging by the ear rather than the eye, pour on to these yellow sands and there—metaphorically—take hands.

Somehow, sand is so much more summery than rocks.

This was good fun, rowdy and raucous, but every piff awmer got $2, plenty of free beer and often an extra shower of coins. There was no sense of humiliation.

Along water fronts of roaring West and South streets at sun-down is a relaxation to be found nowhere else in the metropolis. Everybody seems leaning or sprawling in doorways, curbs or dock ends. There is little talk, much staring. Now and then a tousled, raving harridan staggers among them, scattering epithets as filthy as her bedraggled skirt. Yet no one replies. Mostly men of the ships, one wonders if they are dreaming of the sea. Puffing pipes and dreaming of the sea.

MRS. EBELL IS STILL HELD

While mourners were gathered here today for the funeral services of Hans Ebell, Brookline and Providence [illegible] music teacher, the dead man's ex-wife and a [illegible] friend were still held by [illegible] Connecticut police.

The divorcee, Mrs. Helen Castle Ebell, had hoped to be released today but her liberty was curtailed indefinitely by a kidnaping charge newly brought against her in connection with her attempt to remove her own nine-year-old daughter from a camp near that of her former husband's at a Connecticut lake resort.

Bail for Mrs. Ebell, set at $10,000, was not forthcoming. Louis G[illegible]smith, former Roxbury druggist, is held without bail on a charge of murder.

Ebell, the dead man, is claimed to have lost his life in a struggle with Mrs. Ebell and Goldsmith over custody of the little Ebell girl.

Here in Suffolk county probate court lawyers today undertook a fight to secure Ebell's $5000 estate for his three children.

Ebell's funeral was to be from an Allston undertaking parlor. His body was brought to Boston after its formal release by Coroner Edward G. McKay of New London county, Conn.

Watertown Forgery Claims Before Ballot Board

Witnesses who are claimed to have denied validity of their signatures on nomination papers of a Watertown candidate for the governor's council were called to testify today at a State House ballot law commission hearing.

Decisions of the commission were expected [illegible] regarding the Watertown candidate's battle [illegible] and to others concerning which evidence has been already heard.

Today's first testimony was to be on a protest filed by Frank A. Brooks of Watertown against Philip Burke Becker, who opposes Brooks for place on the Republican ticket as third Massachusetts [illegible]

According to Brooks more than 300 of the signatures on Becker's primary [illegible] papers are forgeries.

Further protests [illegible] to be ruled on [illegible] today included one against a Cambridge woman [illegible] one against papers filed [illegible] Middlesex county [illegible] for [illegible] sheriff and one—a very vehement one—from Andrew J. The boys, with four others, had engaged in a game of tag around a train of freight cars standing on the Boston & Albany railroad tracks near Arlington square.

Several thousand persons passed through the opening day turnstiles of the Marshfield Fair today. It is expected that the three-day fair will have the largest crowd in its history.

Staged for the 88th consecutive year under the direction of the Marshfield Agricultural and Horticultural Society, the fair has attracted splendid exhibits of horses, cattle, sheep, flowers, preserves and all the other things usually on display.

This week the financial district is deriving great pleasure from reports indicating that railroads will be granted a rate increase. As a consequence broad buying appeared at times in the carrier section. We have deliberately refrained from following such rumors. In the first place experience tells us that it is quite a difficult task to "scoop" the Interstate Commerce Commission. Then too we wonder if a rate rise at this time is going to help competing transportation agencies almost as much as it aids the rails. For it seems certain some traffic will be diverted to other carriers.

Sometimes it pays to draw conclusions regarding the market from the action of individual leaders. Yesterday we looked over Telephone; today we take U. S. Steel. From a chartist's viewpoint Steel has broken out on the upside by a slight margin. It is an inconclusive movement, however, and we cannot say it should be followed. A strong possibility exists that general market strength might carry the price to 38. At that point we dare say a fair amount of selling will be encountered. And from shorts as well as longs.

While the rails, as a consequence of their almost straight line slide from above 44 to 33, prove vulnerable to rumors of good news, it is well to allow for a rally above 38. They must sell nearby strength, even though the tops are missed by a dollar or so.

Vigor of Upswing Keeps Technical Position Strong

ELEVATED HAS DEFICIT

Boston Elevated Railway started its new trustee fiscal year with an excess cost of service over receipts of $440,525 for the month of July compared with a similar excess of $111,614 in July a year ago.

Total receipts for the month were $1,737,962 against $1,712,870 last year. Operating expenses increased roughly by the same amount, or from $1,352,529 to $1,375,920. An increase of over $37,000 in taxes, from $100,342 last July to $137,629 in July this year, was the principal factor in the increased deficit.

The road carried more revenue passengers than a year ago, the total for July, 1934 being 19,292,673 against 18,879,514 in the previous July.

DROUTH IS SEEN AS A BLESSING IN DISGUISE

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER

New York, Aug. 23. The official [illegible] that the [illegible] of the drouth [illegible] be harmful [illegible] weather for next [illegible] I might [illegible] prove the means of attaining parity [illegible] maximum of [illegible] calation of goods and services [illegible] thrive on the law of averages, but [illegible] farm [illegible] economic adviser [illegible] of Agricultural [illegible] questions, said. "The general impression here is that the rise in prices will be adequate to offset the reduction in volume so that the total farm income should be well maintained. In addition, of course, there will be benefit payments from the AAA which will bulk larger than those made last year and there will also be additional income from the relief purchases of livestock."

A penetrating analysis of the near-term economic prospects for American farmers and for those who do business with them emphasized the subjoined points:

"The real question for you to consider is the effect of such a maldistribution of farm income as we are going to have this year. Will the areas that are going to profit from this situation as a result of their having crops at high prices buy enough more to offset the curtailed purchases in the drouth-stricken areas?

"The chances are that by concentrating in the areas where incomes are being sustained and increased this year, those dependent upon the farm market will be able to maintain their business this fall.

"There is, however, the problem of volume for some of the distributors next year. To what extent will their purchasing power be affected by the reduction in volume of grain and livestock to be handled? The railroads are, of course, now getting a larger volume of traffic due to the drouth, which will be offset later by the smaller supplies available during the first half of 1935.

"The feed crop situation is, of course, so unprecedented that we have no real basis for determining the effect of such small feed crops and the lack of forage and the curtailment in livestock numbers. Some are inclined to think that the reduction in feed crops does not necessarily bring about anything like an equivalent reduction in livestock numbers so that one needs to be on guard against being too pessimistic with regard to the probable curtailment in livestock production. We are, of course, going to have higher food prices next year due to higher prices for meat, cereals and dairy products, but this should not lift the general cost of living by more than a few per cent."

STATE STREET SIDELIGHTS

Hornblower & Weeks—With minor indications pointing to something more important than a mere technical rally ahead, we would be inclined to take advantage of normal reactionary periods to buy stocks.

Shields & Co.—With the midweek trade reports showing continued decline in the trade line and indicating belated and reduced seasonal fall recovery, the only stimulus for the market must come from the technical influences or Washington developments. As a result, no change in the main character is to be expected. Current Washington meetings should sustain the better tone temporarily but there is no reason to change advised trading policy.

Clark, Childs & Keech—The contents of recent speeches by Dickinson and Roper, together with certain Washington advices, has resulted in renewed hope that there is to be an important change in administration policies which will be helpful to general business. The result is a marked improvement in sentiment and increasing confidence.

J. S. Bache & Co.—Technically, the ability of the general list to wade through previous supply levels with ease and close well above the tops established earlier this month is regarded as highly significant. That the direction of the market's intermediate trend is thereby clearly indicated seems a reasonable assumption.

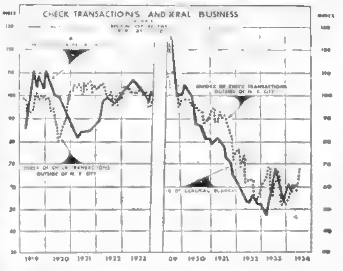
Check Trnsactions



By JOSEPH STAGG LAWRENCE

This chart shows two periods of depression and recovery, 1919 to [illegible] and [illegible] to 1934. The course of business in both periods is represented by the Review of Reviews index of general business, based upon 25 statistical series in three great major fields of economics, viz., finance, distribution, and production.

The broken line shows the total volume of check transactions outside of New York City. The best we can say for the evidence is this: It shows clearly that the downward trend, both in the volume of trade and in physical activity, has definitely been checked during the past two years. There [illegible] the Spring of [illegible]

Equally clear is the fact that no pronounced upward turn, comparable to the reverse slope during the period of 1922-1932, has as yet been established. Since the Spring of the year business has been moving sidewise, and during the month of July shows distinctly though only slightly a tendency to decline. On the other hand, the record of check transactions, as represented by the index, is a much more encouraging weather vane than the composite line of general business itself.

The question which serious students are now raising relates to the authenticity of the improvement which business has realized since the New Deal was first ushered in. It is feared that much of the improvement is due to the great volume of government expenditures, and that only a disappointing portion of it rests upon the solid foundations of natural recovery.

Congress has already appropriated 5.5 million dollars for drouth relief. When we add to this the payments which the Federal Relief Administration and the AAA are making, together with the option profits realized by Southern cotton growers, the addition to the farmers' cash income out of the Federal treasury, it may well exceed a billion dollars for the current year. In fact, this is approximately equal to the improvement which the cash income of the farmer during the current year seems to show over 1933.

U. S. GETS DEBT NOTE FROM GERMANY

Copyright, 1934, by International News Service

Berlin, Aug. 23—American holders of more than one billion dollars' worth of German bonds sold in the United States will find little satisfaction in Germany's latest debt note to the State Department.

The note, which, it was learned today, now is in the hands of American officials at Washington, gives no promise of non-discrimination against American bondholders nor does it indicate its willingness to resume payments on the Dawes and Young plan loans in the immediate future.

Instead, it seeks to leave the way open for further discussions with the American government concerning a new agreement which would involve a refunding plan for a large part of the bonds held in this country and would be designed to make future debt payments dependent to a considerable extent on the amount of goods Germany is able to sell abroad.

The note ignores completely Secretary of State Hull's indirect charge that the policies of Chancellor Adolf Hitler were partly responsible for the fact Germany has no money with which to pay its debts.

It also ignores Hull's reference to the use of funds diverted from foreign debt payments for the purchase of war materials and the repurchase of German securities at 40 per cent of their face value.

In overlooking the sharpness of Secretary Hull's note of last June and the American "aide memoire" of July 17, the German government has gone out of its way to avoid controversy.

The note is exceedingly mild and conciliatory, seeking principally to induce the United States government to discuss the situation.

In this respect, it also ignores the declaration made in the American note that the United States government was interested chiefly in receiving assurance there would be no discrimination against American bondholders and was not prepared to negotiate any modification of the originally contracted private debts. Such modification, the aide memoire said, must be left to the direct representatives of the bondholders.

New York Central Loadings Lower

For week ended August 18 New York Central's own line loadings totaled 38,261 cars, against 45,781 in the like week last year. Receipts from connections totaled 49,496 cars, against 59,922. Total loadings were 87,757 cars, against 105,703 cars, a decrease of 17 per cent.

In week ended August 11 own line loadings totaled 37,875, against 44,761 a year ago. Receipts from connections totaled 48,444, against 55,625. Total loadings were 86,319 cars, against 100,386 in like 1933 week, a decrease of 14 per cent.

In week ended August 18 loadings showed a decline of 16.4 per cent compared with a year ago, against a decrease of 15.4 per cent in previous week.

Study of Boston Trade Reveals Little Activity

Although there has been a slight increase in trading in the local wool market during the past week the long period of dull business still continues and quotations remain unchanged. Western-grown wools continue to arrive in Boston in quite large quantities, mostly on a consignment basis. Some calls for mohair are being received and carpet wools have become fairly active. The wool top market, however, is at a standstill.

Deliveries of contracts already on hand are very limited. The piece goods market is slow, without prospects for much increased activity in the near future. Woolen and worsted yarn spinners are receiving very few orders and prices continue unchanged.

Cotton mills still are operating according to the code provision on 25 per cent curtailment basis, but an increased demand for gray goods and a moderate trade in the finished cotton cloth, has placed sales ahead of production. It is not expected, however, that mill operations will be speeded up in the near future.

New orders for cotton yarns are comparatively light, but spinners are expecting more activity before long. There has been considerable resistance to the new higher prices necessitated by the increasing costs of the raw material.

The staple lines of rayon cloth are moving rather slowly but there has been an increased call for some of the novelty lines. Prices are steady. Silks also are moving rather slowly, as manufacturers are unwilling to place their orders now.

The arrangements of the government to withhold the surplus supply of hides and prices are advancing. This, in turn, has stabilized the leather market. Sole and upper leather prices have strengthened and manufacturers are showing a disposition to purchase their requirements.

Manufacturers are relieved of their uncertainties regarding price changes and quantity buyers are coming into the market more freely.

Cotton Steady in New York Trading

New York, Aug. 23 (INS)—The cotton market held narrowly today, following its break of $1.25 a bale in yesterday's dealings, with the contracts list marking time around previous closings as the noon hour was approached.

Late in the forenoon, the list was unchanged to up 3 points, with October up 2 at 13.17; December up 1 at 13.32; January up 1 at 13.38; March unchanged at 13.49, and May up 3 at 13.58.

Auto Financing Shows Increase

On a daily average basis the dollar volume of retail financing of new passenger automobiles showed an increase of 50 per cent during July as compared with a year ago and an increase of 159 per cent compared with July, 1932, according to preliminary estimates by the Commerce Department. As compared with June there was a decrease of about 3 per cent.

U.S.CONDITIONS ANALYZED BY EUROPEANS

By B. C. FORBES

What course will President Roosevelt seek to steer from now on?

Will he give "business some encouragement," or will he "expand the sphere of government influence over every department of social and economic activity, perhaps after the model of the Russian experiment?"

B. C. Forbes

How do intelligent Europeans answer these questions, raised by them?

While I was in Europe a few weeks ago, the Royal Bank of Scotland published in its July circular an article which reflects accurately, so far as I could gather, the judgment formed by [illegible] responsible Europeans who closely follow and keenly study developments here.

Since it often is illuminating to "see ourselves as others see us," the following extracts may interest thoughtful American citizens:

"It is now a year and a half since the Roosevelt administration took office and inaugurated the policies collectively designated as the 'new deal.' In terms of the promises of the administration, the nation, which fell in enthusiastically behind the banner of the new deal, should now be half-way on the road to a new and lasting recovery.

"Kaleidoscopic as have been the changes which Americans have witnessed in the economic scene during the past eighteen months, the vision which confronts them is not that of the promised land, and the marchers though in the main still trustful of their leader, are wondering as never before what is to be the outcome of it all.

"The one certain fact is that the outward and visible results of the new deal have fallen far short of those which the administration colorfully presented to the imagination of Americans. 'Relief, recovery and reform' were the trinity of tasks to which the government directed its adventurous program.

"Most Americans would still accept these objects as entirely worthy of government endeavor, but an increasing number (judging by the growing volume of criticism of the administration's proposals) are finding themselves no longer able to endorse the specific interpretation placed upon them by President Roosevelt.

"There are no reliable indications yet that private enterprise is ready to take over and sustain business revival.

"President Roosevelt can shorten the period of transition by giving business some encouragement to exercise its latent initiative. This would involve a truce to further experiment and, probably, also, revision, or at least a more liberal interpretation, of some of the more restrictive clauses of the Securities Act, Stock Exchange Act, National Recovery Act, and numerous other acts by which private enterprise is at present circumscribed.

"The alternative is to abandon the idea that business will recover of itself in any reasonable time and to accept full responsibility for the entire economic organization of the country. This would mean extending the sphere of government influence over every department of social and economic activity, perhaps after the model of the Russian experiment; what else it would involve is best left to the imagination.

"Despite his insistence on the need for social reconstruction, it is difficult to believe that a Sovietized America is the President's ideal. He is still reputedly opposed to the currency inflation, which, almost certainly, would accompany such an experiment. Nor would he carry the majority of Americans very far with him along such a road.

"There is a popular cry for inflation. Will the President be able to resist the forces which he has released? Will the government be able to retire from the fields of business before normal methods of financing its huge emergency expenditures break down?

"The answer depends partly on Mr. Roosevelt's power to retain his personal hold on the imagination of Americans."

PROFIT-TAKING CHECKS RALLY IN SHARES

New York, Aug 23—Profit-taking [illegible] by yesterday's widespread advance checked the rally in the market today and brought a moderate amount of irregularity into evidence.

Trading, however, slowed down to a snail's pace once the irregularity set in and such losses as did come into being were held to small fractions as the market preserved its good tone.

Another factor in snagging the advance was the treasury's action in allowing the shipment of $1,000,000 to France, thereby rallying the d[illegible].

Railroad shares were again the prime favorites with the trading element [illegible]. Where attempts to extend yesterday's gains met with [illegible] a few issues such as [illegible] Southern Railway and Southern Pacific scored fractional gains.

Utilities displayed a better tone today with Columbia Gas and National Power & Light advancing fractionally on a fair demand.

United States Steel and other industrial shares were sluggish. General Motors and Chrysler ran into offerings shortly after the opening and suffered small losses.

Commodity markets were reactionary with wheat and cotton off moderately.

Aside from the assurance given by Secretary [illegible] Wall Street [illegible] deal [illegible].

[illegible] further [illegible] the American [illegible] was [illegible].

The dollar assumed a firmer tone but the French franc remained around levels where further gold [illegible] from the United States were [illegible].

Gold continued strong in the open market in London [illegible] toward the 1934 peak [illegible] February.

The [illegible] slump in business last month was reflected in the monthly figures [illegible] volume of bankers acceptances. They showed a decline of $18,558,[illegible] to $[illegible],714.

In view of the recent [illegible] the franc the [illegible] of gold [illegible] Bank of France was anticipated. [illegible] weekly statement disclosed a gain of [illegible] francs in gold.

The British pound opened at $5.09⅞, off ⅛ of a cent. French francs were unchanged at 6.69½ cents.

GENERAL TIRE TRANSFERS

Akron is again the center of General Tire's export business, it was announced today by J. A. Andreoli, vice president and general manager of The General Tire and Rubber Export Company.

During the recent labor walkout at the company's Akron plant General transferred to its Canadian plant in Toronto the export business that had been previously handled out of Akron.

As had been the case before the walkout the part of the General's export business that can be conducted more advantageously from Canada will still be handled from Toronto in addition to the Canadian domestic business, Andreoli said.

The rest of General's export business, however, has now been diverted back to Akron, [illegible] of production from the company's [illegible] plant.

General has been increasing production rapidly at its Mexican plant in Mexico City. Ever since General took over manufacturing control of the Compania Hulera el Popo with General Tire engineers supervising the manufacture of the General Popo tires there has been a marked increase of imports of crude rubber into Mexico and a decided decrease of imports of finished tires in the southern republic.

"A marked increase in imports of crude rubber by Mexico has been reported to the Department of Commerce by its commercial attache in Mexico City," says a special Washingon dispatch to the Wall Street Journal. "Improved manufacturing facilities, favorable exchange and high duties on manufactured tires and tubes were cited as causes of the increased rubber imports. Tire imports are on the decline because of improved quality of the home product."

New England Mills Share Business

New England mills and commission houses shared as follows in awards for furnishing sheeting to the Federal Surplus Relief Corp. [illegible] 244: [illegible] & Co., 240,000 yards, [illegible] 315,000 yards, [illegible] cents; Pepperell Manufacturing Co., 1,970,000 yards, 24.8[illegible] cents; Nashua Manufacturing Co. 420,000 yards, 24.28 cents.

HIGHER TREND IN CURB MART

By International News Service

New York, Aug 23—The curb market continued to point higher in early dealings today, although the appearance of cautious profit-taking held further advances to nominal proportions.

Utility shares were unusually active, with an initial block of 1800 shares of Electric Bond & Share changing hands at 11⅞, its best level onthe move, and ⅛ above its previous close. American Gas & Electric and United Gas also gained some ground, while in the senior classification, United Gas preferred jumped 1¾ points to 35½.

Technicolor, Swift, Libby, McNeil & Libby, and American Cyanamid B were active and fractionally higher in the specialty group.

Possible Merger of Small Auto Firms

It is possible that merger of a number of smaller automobile manufacturers may result from informal converstaions in progress recently. As far as can be ascertained, however, no specific grouping of companies has been considered.

Small independents have come to realize their salvation under present conditions lies in combining to place operations on a more economic basis. One important saving from a merger would be substantial, reduced tool and die costs which in itself probably would be sufficient in some instances to mean the difference between unprofitable and profitable operations.

Furthermore, dealer organizations could be materially strengthened because of the possibility of offering a line of cars with a broader price range than a small independent producer can turn out on his own.

Molybdenum Gives Report

Molybdenum Corp. of America reports for six months ended June 30, 1934, profit of $217,053 after interest, depreciation and federal taxes, but before depletion, against $36,955 in first half of 1933. After provision of $44,162 for depletion of mineral lands, there was a net profit for six months ended June 30, last, of $172,891, against a net profit in first half of preceding year of $2250 after provision of $34,705 for depletion.

Officials state improvement in earnings this year is attributable to increased demand for alloys manufactured by the company. During the past six months the new mill at Tucson, Ariz., has been brought into production and an addition is now being designed. Unfilled orders are the largest in history and should permit continued operations at a good rate, officials say.

Applications by the Exchange for registration will not be accepted until after September 15, the closing date for applications by the companies, it was announced. By AUSTEN LAKE

YACHTSMEN ARE PROUD PEOPLE. Since Tuesday, when I typed a column of hearsay about the America's Cup defenders, speaking of their "mahogany bottoms and teak decks" and slurring the million dollar toys becomingly, I have been getting shouts and shrieks by mail.

Austen Lake

So I may as well step into the typographical woodshed and expose my editorial flank to the shingle. I'd rather be spanked by somebody I know, so I'll let Ed Shriftgiesser, the demon yacht author and gloomy Hamlet of this journal, do it.

"You complain (Ed. Note—Spare the word please!) that there is nothing utilitarian in the international racing yachts. How much more utilitarian are the horses at Narragansett, which get a full page in every newspaper. The Endeavour sailed across the ocean. How far would one of those 'Gansett plugs get hauling a utilitarian dump cart?

"YOU SAY MOST OF THE BOATS are built in foreign parts. The rules have always required that the yachts be built in the country they represent. That was how the series started in 1851—the Americans wanted to show the British that we could build faster ships." (Ed. Note: Bullseye!)

"Sure enough, Swedes ARE hired to man the defenders. The Swedes do the hard labor aboard the ship, pulling ropes and shining brass, just like your Lafayette College used to hire foreigners from the mines and docks to play football." (Ed. Note: Now really Mr. Shriftgiesser . . . hit in the fairway!)

"In practically all the races for the last 80 years, defenders have been sailed by their amateur owners, though in some series sailing masters like Charley Barr have taken the tiller.

"Lipton hired paid sailing masters because he knew nothing about sailing. That is why he always lost. He couldn't tell whether they were doing a good job or not and didn't care, so long as his tea received plenty of free advertising." (Ed. Note: Nil nisi bonum and bullseye . . . maybe!)

Except between 1895 and 1910, the boats have been well built and staunch. Vanitie, racing this year as a trial horse, was built in 1914, and, except for the war years, has raced every season since."

MR. S. IS STILL SWINGING the paddle.

"I took a lot of kidding from editors because in 1930, I said that of the 100 or more reporters, both male and female, who were in Newport to cover the races, not more than a dozen knew what it was all about, and the minority of experienced writers had to carry them around on our backs. You know how you would feel if a sob sister with a lipstick smile, pinheels and a lot of vacuity under her turban, was sent out to cover the World Series in your place?"

And now, Mr. S. may I hiest my breeches and fan my posterior blush. It may be broccoli to you, but it's still spinach to me. I hope those Lafayette "foreigners" and lipstick sisters part your hair with a tire iron some dark night.

AS A SHIRTTAIL TO BILL WERBER'S impertinent steal of second base on Tuesday, after being walked by "Schoolboy" Rowe, and while Catcher George Hayworth of the Tigers nursed the ball, a Roxbury fan (S. J. H.), wants to know whether Werber would have been entitled to advance beyond first base if the fourth ball had been a wild pitch.

The answer is "yes."

The ball would still be in play, unless it went into the stands or stuck on the backstop screen and the runner could run at his own peril.

The same thing is true of a third strike missed by the catcher. The runner may advance as far as he can.

TO DRAW A MILLION PAID ADMISSIONS during the home season in any major league park, the daily gate for 77 games must average 14,280. But most parks depend on their occasional capacity crowds—such as the Red Sox have been getting lately, to raise their season's total.

However, Mickey Cochrane tells me that Detroit has an excellent chance to pass the million mark this year—for the third time in the club's history. And Detroit has the smallest ball park in the American League, 26,000 capacity.

My impression is that Fenway Park also will not be far under the coveted million by the end of this year.

* * *

BILL TERRY, SOMETHING OF AN ORAL blunderbuss when he gives up anything for publication, says:

"The Yankees are a better club than Detroit. Mickey Cochrane's club can be pitched to . . . Rowe isn't as fast as Schumacher."

This is right down Cochrane's favorite alley. He loves to hate an opponent, and he is always quick to dramatize a fancied insult. As in the case when Bucky Harris, Red Sox manager, said last spring:

"There's one club (Detroit) we'll beat."

Mickey posted the clipping on the Tigers' clubhouse bulletin board and gave off repeated vocal blasts. Unless I mistake Cochrane, when the time comes, he will make welcome use of Terry's slur to stir his lads to a pitch of fury.

Cochrane has a talent as an agitator, which is one of the main reasons why he has driven Detroit to the top of the league. On the other hand Casey Stengel, Brooklyn manager, who is slower to emotion and uninspiring, tried to use a Terry insult of last February to no avail.

"O, is that club still in the league," Terry had sneered.

Casey, in his lugubrious good-natured way tried to whip up his lads, but they wouldn't whip. And the result is, to date, that the Giants have won 12 of 17 games from the Dodgers.

If Detroit wins the A. L. pennant and the Giants win in the National League, I am picking the Tigers in the World Series. Purely on psychology. And, unless meanwhile, some of Cochrane's hired helpers spring spavins and snap their bones, I will not shave this prediction later on.

Sad Sam's Bumper Spinach Crop Keeps Pal Busy Mowing

"Come out from behind that spinach, Sam," says Al Simmons as he hoes away on Sam Jones' whiskers. The White Sox pair provide a flock of laughs with their whiskers act in which they mimic pitcher Allan Benson of the Nats, former House of David toiler, who sports real whiskers. Here's a secret—Jones' whiskers are phony. Sam says he'd be tickled to death if he ever let a real beard grow. (Pictures by Boston American Staff Photographer.)

A formidable infield is this revamped White Sox four. Left to right, they are, Manager Jimmy Dykes, 1st; Minter Hayes, 2nd; Marty Hopkins, 3d, and Luke Appling, short. Hayes and Appling, among the best midfield combinations in the majors, were inactive all the early season because of injuries. Now they're back, and the White Sox are starting to click. Manager Dykes is holding down first in the absence of Zeke Bonura. Bonura, one of the home run leaders, has a painful groin injury and may be out for the season. Appling had a big day against the Red Sox in the opener, getting three hits and fielding exceptionally. Two of his hits were doubles.

MIKEL-TRAINED COLT ENTERED IN 5TH RACE

ican is capable of leading this field home to the wire. He has failed to show his real form in past races but is on razor edge for today's effort.

FIRST RACE

Flag Time, Race Street, Meeting Place

FLAG TIME has been away from the races since the Salem meeting, but he should experience little difficulty in handling this poor lot. RACE STREET, an erratic post horse, would prove exceptionally dangerous if he would run kindly. MEETING PLACE is as fit as hands can make him and looks next best.

SECOND RACE

Paper Profits, Stretch Call, Reigh Rose

The changed condition of the track should prove beneficial to PAPER PROFITS. The latter ran as though she disliked the track in her two outings over this course. However, the strip is now lightning fast and will be more to her liking. STRETCH CALL has been racing well and looks next best. REIGH ROSE should be along in time to save the show award.

THIRD RACE

Wax, Polly Plum, Alaric

WAX appears to be well suited by all the conditions of this affair. Under the feather impost of 107 pounds, he should have little trouble in earning the verdict. Tuesday morning he breezed a half-mile in .47.4 as a final. POLLY PLUM has been showing a high turn of foot with $3000 platers. She should go well in this company. ALARIC, a slow beginner, is favored by an outside post position and may share in the spoils.

FOURTH RACE

Jadaan, Saturnino, Rough Player

JADAAN is a full brother to Character and has been showing high speed in his morning trials. The clockers have caught him working six furlongs in 1:15 on several occasions. If any account at all, he should hold this poor lot safe. SATURNINO worked fast at Saratoga before shipping here. His one start over that course was in the nature of a conditioner and may be thrown out. ROUGH PLAYER is another that has been showing high speed in his morning trials.

FIFTH RACE

Gold Step, The Pelican, Crazy Jane

If anything upsets my dope and downs the J. D. Mikel entry in this affair, it will likely be CRAZY JANE. The latter raced as though dead short in her outing the other day and should show a world of improvement.

SIXTH RACE

Pernickety, Wirt. G. Bowman, Our Sallie

PERNICKETY'S last race was too poor to be true. Prior to that race she displayed a nice effort to place to Prince Abbot. A repitition of that race would make her the winner. WIRT G. BOWMAN figures to offer the contention. OUR SALLIE has received several tighteners and is due to come to life.

SEVENTH RACE

Koterito, Pennywise, Prince Abbot

KOTERITO is razor sharp. Tuesday morning he took the track and whirled a mile in 1.41. In his present shape he should have little trouble in handling this lot. PENNYWISE received a very poor ride last out. Mayhap that he'll hop up and upset my calculations. PRINCE ABBOT was never better and looks next best.

Cupid Stays Firing Hand of Clark Griffiths

By Davis J. Walsh
International News Service Sports Editor

New York, Aug. 23—It's all a little mysterious and unusual, especially the part where young Joe Cronin, Washington player-manager and baseball's most eligible bachelor, was reported engaged to the boss' niece one day and on his way to Chicago the next.

However, it's always unusual when Clark Griffith hasn't fired the manager by August and his behavior in this instance is practically unprecedented.

He was, they said, of a mind to fire the manager last year when the ball team was second. This year the ball team is fifth and everything seems to be superb.

After all, even Mr. Griffith may see some difficulty in trading a betrothal for two pitchers and a utility infielder.

HEIR TO CLUB

The niece in question, I understand, has been legally adopted by the old man and is one of the principal heirs to the Washington ball club, which might seem to indicate that the press boys were a little impulsive during the last world's series when they assailed young Mr. Cronin as a man without judgment.

As to that, I'm not so certain that he isn't a pretty good manager. Possibly it's the ball team that has failed this year, rather than Cronin.

His first baseman, Kuhel, has faded down below .300. So has one of his outfielders, Schulte. His second baseman, Buddy Myer, had a big year in 1933 and is just another ball player now. Cronin himself was hitting down around .280 the last time I looked.

Only Manush, in fact, was come on over last year, with Young Travis, the third baseman, a conspicuous improvement over Bluege. Besides, one of three winning pitchers, Alvin Crowder, is gone altogether and the other two, Whitehill and Stewart, have been slightly less than adequate.

Nevertheless, Mr. Griffith's record proves that hes not the man to look to causes when effects are available. He is, indeed, inclined to be impetuous with his managers, as George McBride, Clyde Milan, Donie Bush, Stanley Harris and Walter Johnson can regretfully attest.

HARRIS LASTED FOUR YEARS

McBride and Milan lasted one year each. Bush took the club from sixth to fourth and was fired. Harris won two pennants and naturally received unusual clemency. He wasn't fired until the fourth year. Walter Johnson finished fifth, second and third his first three years and was fired at the end of the fourth.

I'm not putting the finger on young Mr. Cronin. In fact, I think the old man may be making a pretty good, all round deal. He's acquiring an excellent relative by marriage and apparently keeping title to the young man who, by clean living and right thinking, seems in line to become a fair country manager.

THE CLUB QUARTET

The increasing demand for this set of 4 Bobby Jones woods is proof of their popularity. Driver, Brassie, Spoon and Baffy Spoon—a perfectly balanced quartet—with the "feel" suited to your own individual needs.

APPLING, HAYES STRENGTHEN CHISOX

By Joe Cashman

The White Sox have improved 100 per cent since they were last in these parts. The answer is simple enough. Luke Appling and Minter Hayes, both on the injured list earlier in the season, are functioning again as one of the smoothest keystone combinations in the loop, and Al Simmons is hustling.

The White Sox "jockeys" kept inquiring in very loud tones, throughout the game, why Wes Ferrell hadn't faced "Schoolboy" Rowe the day before. The Fenway ace said nothing. He replied with his bat.

Al Simmons had hit safely in 16 straight games before reaching here. Against Ferrell, he fanned once and failed to reach in four times up.

It was a dumb play that paved the way for the Red Sox first run. "Moose" Solters was on third base with two out.

He set sail for the plate as though he intended to steal. Then, about 10 yards away he stopped as though surprised that Rick Ferrell, at bat, hadn't hit the pitch. He scored when the throw to nail him went wild.

A steal was out of order with the natives two runs behind. A hit and run or squeeze under the circumstances would have been sheer insanity. Somebody must have got the signals crossed.

Leaving the bat, Wes Ferrell's first home run looked as if it would be caught. Al Simmons backed up against the wall in the hope of getting it.

The second and game winning blow by the Fenway ace, however, saw Simmons and "Mule" Hass romping for the clubhouse while the ball was still over the infield.

Pat "Keep Cool With" O'Toole, Detroit's leather-lung rooter, was gone but George "Long Live Linen" Marshall, owner of the Redskins was present. The gridiron magnate never cheered any louder or more enthusiastically for his pigskin pupils than he did for the Sox. Over the railing of his box he leaped to be the first to congratulate Ferrell on his tenth-inning homer.

Roy Johnson gave the White Sox a run when he dropped a Haas hoist in the third but he robbed them of a marker in the first when he made a leaping catch of Appling's vicious line drive with a runner on. The Appling person, incidentally, made three of the seven Chicago hits, including two doubles.

Brothers Ferrell made five hits. Wes collected a single in addition to his two homers and Rick pounded out two singles as well as drawing a walk.

Manager Jimmy Dykes had his two sons, James, Jr. and Charles, as his guests at the game. The boys are vacationing at Buress Fowler's camp in Casco, Me.

The Tigers had reason to regret that Earl Whitehill was ever allowed to leave Detroit. The southpaw ace of the Senators beat the league-leaders and thus reduced their margin to five games over the Yanks, who split with the Indians.

Vernon 'Lefty' Gomez accounted for the New York victory, blanking the Indians with two hits as he registered his 21st win of the campaign.

Revere Races Off

Rain, which fell 10 minutes before race time, forced postponement of the mid-week Revere motorcycle races. They will be staged next Saturday evening. About 1200 were awaiting the start of the races when the shower started.

Colored Boy Barred, Springfield Quits

Gastonia, N. C., Aug. 23—The Springfield, Mass., American Legion junior baseball team was on its way home today, without participating in the Eastern sectional tournament, because a Gastonia hotel had refused to accommodate a Negro member of the New England team.

The hotel management contended it was prevented by state law from accommodating or serving a Negro.

Gastonia Legion officials attempted to have the boy lodged at the residence of a Negro doctor. The Springfield management refused to accept the offer.

The subject of contention was Ernest "Bunny" Taliferro, Springfield's crack pitcher and center fielder.

SARATOGA HURT BY 'GANSETT MEETING

By Damon Runyon

(Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service Inc.)

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 23—Upwards of $500,000 was spent by the cash customers at the yearling sales in Saratoga this season.

Nothing like the good old days of the gold rush, to be sure, but an improvement on the past few years, when even the wealthiest horse owners were keeping the elastics on their bank rolls.

The highest price paid this season for a yearling was $11,500. At this figure, Mr. Warren Wright, of Chicago, owner of the Calumet stable, made several of the rich men of the East take right out, though back in the mad-twenties, that kind of money would have been just a fair starting bid for a highly prized yearling.

It was in those days that a record price of $75,000 was hung up in the old sales shed. But an expenditure of $500,000 on yearlings indicates that confidence in the future has returned to the racing game.

THE KUNNEL KNOWS

There is no greater gamble than the purchase of a yearling. One man may pay $25,000 for something bred in the deep purple, at the same sale another man may pick up an obscurely parented critter for $200.

The $25,000 prize may never get to the barrier, while the $200 plug goes on and wins numerous races and plenty of cash. Old Kunnel Bradley, of Kentucky, put it in a different form the other day when he was inspecting a batch of eight yearlings purchased by one stable.

"I'll lay you even money you haven't got a winner in the lot," said the Kunnel to the stable trainer.

He did not mean this in disparagement of the purchases. He was merely bringing up the law of average against yearlings. No experienced horseman would look at a yearling, and put himself on record as saying that this yearling would be a winner.

'GANSETT HURTS SPA

But it is the very gamble of the thing that keeps horsemen buying the yearlings every season. This year they were all remembering that Mrs. Isabella Dodge Sloane bought one a couple of years ago for $1200 which turned out to be Cavalcade.

To what extent the race meeting at Narragansett has hurt Saratoga is problematical. The writer thinks it took a couple of thousand regulars away from here and many horses.

By regulars he means turf followers who ordinarily live in Saratoga throughout the month of August. Most of the big time stables have their important horses here but are racing second string divisions in Rhode Island.

The attendance here has been only fair on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays. On Fridays and Saturdays it has been excellent, perhaps well ahead of last year. It is said the meeting here will make money this year but without Narragansett it would have been much bigger.

VIVIENNE SEGAL

Vivienne Segal . . . Who was a prima donna at 15 . . . In a Broadway operetta . . . And who is still a prima donna . . . On the air . . . As well as on the stage . . . And on the screen . . . With years . . . And years . . . And years still to go.

This lilting lady is from Philadelphia . . . Where she attended William Penn and Girls High schools . . . As well as the Academy of the Sister of Mercy . . . And an art school . . . With her father a specialist in child diseases . . . And a famous diagnostician.

Vivienne . . . When only 8 . . . Was president of her school dramatic club . . . And even then dreamed of becoming a famous actress . . . With her mother encouraging her . . . But her dad putting on the frown . . . Although he had no objections to an operatic career.

She was proficient as a pianist at 12 . . . And was appearing in the Philadelphia Operatic Society ballet . . . As well as playing "Puck" . . . In "A Midsummer Night's Dream" . . . For which she received her first newspaper criticism.

Various amateur parts did she fill . . . And when she was 15 came her big chance . . . A starring part in the Shubert production of "Blue Paradise" . . . Which she fulfilled with only four days of rehearsal . . . Making her debut right smack on Broadway . . . And since then her successes are too numerous to mention.

Vivienne has auburn hair and dark brown eyes . . . And stands five feet three . . . Weighs 105 pounds . . . Likes to travel in ships or airplanes . . . Likes to walk and dance . . . And watch races, fights, hockey and football . . . Believes 13 is her lucky number . . . And hates this season's hats.

Paul Whiteman Having Radio Birthday

By N. F. T.

Again we come to the day on the night of which the ranking "big three" of all radio programs for the NBC network form 3 hour dial procession, (WEEI) between 8 and 11 o'clock. Meaning the weekly Rudy Vallee Varieties, the "Showboat" layout and the Paul Whiteman portion.

* * *

Rudy sends us the versatile Cross and Dunn duo again, he announces. It begins to look very much as though those two chaps have found a home in the Vallee camp, so many "mike" turns have they had with the crooning conductor. As a star attraction, the name Ernest Truex heads Vallee's show tonight. Master of the whimsical, Truex is taking to radio readily of late and he likes it. Lou Holtz has the comedy relief spot to occupy with his glib gab. A Casino de Paree performer named Lillian Carmen fills the feminine place that every program must reserve in order to score heavily with the greatest number of loudspeaker patrons.

STUDIO SAILING

Mythically, as usual, the studio "Showboat" docks at Rochester this evening, come 9 o'clock. Nothing exactly striking looms to rate special mention as the cast awaits the signal to start, unless it might be a new song and dance melody called "The Carlos" which Conrad Thibault and the ensemble are due to contribute. Otherwise, it's another typical Showboat presentation, featuring Lanny Ross, Annette Hanshaw, "Molasses and January," the genial Charles (Capt'n Henry) Winninger and Muriel Wilson.

* * *

On the stroke of 10 o'clock, when Paul Whiteman puts out over the ozone, the occasion will mark his first birthday on the air with his current cheese concern backing. Paul promises an extravagant musical effort, replete with modern and semi-classical selections. Paul indulges very special orchestral arrangements perhaps more than any of the baton brandishers. Very often it happens that the tunes are difficult to identify, so intricate become such arrangement and variation.

FIRES RAGE IN NOVA SCOTIA

By Associated Press

Halifax, N. S., Aug. 23—Serious forest fires continued to eat into valuable timberlands throughout the mainland of Nova Scotia today after levelling 10 buildings, rendering several families homeless and destroying hundreds of acres of woodland.

Flames threatened communities in Antigonish, Hants and Cumberland counties. At Georgeville, on the northern shore of Antigonish, two houses, two stores and a barn were destroyed.

At Walton a fire raging out of control had burned up 500 acres of soft wood lands and was approaching the village of Brookville. Fire rangers in Colchester county early today reported new outbreaks at Lornevale and Montrose. Fanned by a high wind it was feared these would spread over a wide area. New outbreaks were reported in Prince Edward Island.

DRIVER HELD; AUTO 'FLEES'

While arresting John Drozek, 28, of Mercer street, South Boston, for improper operation of his machine early this morning, Patrolman Charles Brown, assigned to the summer squad at South Boston, made the mistake of not removing the keys from Drozek's machine.

As he was locking Drozek up, a man who later was identifed as Joseph F. Arasin, 22, of Humboldt place, South Boston, jumped into the machine and drove it away.

Half an hour later Arasin was picked up at Dorchester street and Old Colony avenue, South Boston. Both men were booked on a charge of being drunk and operating under the influence of liquor, while additional charges of operating so as to endanger, and larceny of an auto were placed against Arasin.

An Unjustified and Unpatriotic Attack on the American Merchant Marine

THAT a member of the President's cabinet should entertain such views as Secretary of Agriculture Wallace expressed in his letter on the American merchant marine to Congressman Bland, of Virginia, should disqualify him from holding any office in the Government.

In his amazing proposal to "plow under," the American shipping industry, Secretary Wallace said:

> "Any further governmental encouragement of the shipping industry by subsidy or similar measures would tend to divert the energies of our people in some degree into shipping as compared with other industries.
> "Is it not possible that it may be more to our economic advantage as a nation to concentrate on the exploitation of our rich internal resources, leaving partly to foreigners the carrying trade, in which our natural advantages over them are not as great as in some other form of industry? . . . .
> "If we further protect shipping, we shall export less of our farm commodities."

Such views are stupid! They are unpatriotic! It is difficult to see wherein they fall short of being treasonable!

For a consultant of the President, and the head of a great executive department, to defy the settled and declared policy of the United States to support and encourage, and, by a policy of consistent aid, to maintain and develop the American merchant marine, gravely compromises the Administration.

IN England such a flaming indiscretion would be followed by the ousting of the entire Cabinet. The consequences of such folly could not be averted by the resignation of the offending Minister.

In France the effect of so appalling a distortion of the country's purposes, so flagrant a mis-reading and imperilling of the national interest, would be attended by such a wave of public indignation that the Government of the day would collapse in an instant.

Under our institutions, the displeasure of the people may not be able to make itself felt with the same promptness, but there is no mistaking the depth and vigor of the popular resentment stirred up by the Wallace letter.

Senator Fletcher, the chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, is justified in the confidence he voices that the American people and Congress will strike back AT ANY PROGRAM to strangle the United States merchant marine.

Of the Wallace attitude, he says it is "the same as we would expect to come from a foreign competitor."

Secretary Wallace shows a woeful ignorance of his subject and complete incapacity to touch it except to muddle it.

He has forgotten apparently the disastrous experiences, in the past, of the farming interest for which he presumes to speak.

He has forgotten, if in fact he ever knew, what we have suffered from our dependence upon foreign shipping and our lack of an adequate merchant marine to save our access to foreign markets and preserve the natural outlets for the goods of our farms and factories.

DURING the late war it was estimated that the loss to our farmers alone, through the lack of American ships to carry their produce to the eager and clamorous markets of the world, was $600,000,000.

It was during these years that the freight rate on a bushel of wheat to Europe was fifty cents, as compared with the normal rate of three cents.

The freight rate for cotton, from Texas to Liverpool, jumped from $2.50 to $50 a bale.

This was what happened to our growers of staples when, dependent on foreign ships to carry our goods, we could not get the ships we needed and did not have enough ships of our own.

When facts such as these fail to register upon the intelligence of Secretary Wallace, it is perhaps idle to expect him to appreciate the importance of an adequate merchant marine to our national security and to the efficiency of our Navy.

We are now spending $250,000,000 to bring our Navy up to our neglected quota under the London Naval Treaty.

It is a known fact that, without the support of an adequate merchant marine, the efficiency of a naval vessel is reduced AS MUCH AS FIFTY PER CENT, and under some conditions, virtually destroyed.

The entire amount now spent for the protection of our merchant marine, under the terms of the existing Federal statute for the encouragement of American shipbuilders and operators, amounts to only a little over $20,000,000 per year, which is barely sufficient to absorb the higher cost of operation for an American ship, as compared with European competitors.

It is this meager encouragement, this barely sufficient protection of our shipping industry—an industry more vital than almost any other to our commercial interests as well as to our national safety, that Secretary Wallace would abolish and withdraw.

AND WHY?

Because of a little circle of puerile, not to say vicious, reasoning that would disgrace a school boy!

Because, says Secretary Wallace, if we renounce our carrying trade to our foreign competitors, THEY WOULD HAVE MORE MONEY WITH WHICH TO BUY OUR GOODS.

THERE it is in a nut-shell.

Nations which are not ashamed to repudiate their debts to us, which borrow without thought of repayment, willing to foist upon the American taxpayer the cost of a war in which we had no interest, and entered only to save them from mutual destruction—nations such as these, Mr. Wallace believes, will rush to our markets with the money we wring FROM OUR OWN INDUSTRIES, and buy goods that they can only regard as competing with their own—BUY, where they will NOT PAY even what they OWE.

That is the Wallace proposition!

Rather silly and fatuous—we must say.

And small wonder it is—that signs continue to multiply that the country is getting fed up with kindergarten economics of this type—and Mother Goose economists (or perhaps we should say "statesmen") of the Wallace type!

Answer for President

The Massachusetts Department of the Necessaries of Life this week supplied for many persons the answer to President Roosevelt's radio question: "Aren't you better off than a year ago?"

It announced that the cost of living in this state during July was 7 per cent higher than in the same month a year ago, and 12½ per cent higher than in March, 1933.

Only a few beneficiaries of NRA minimum wage standards can report any corresponding increase in their income.

At the same time comes news from Washington that food dealers are mobilizing for a war on profiteers. With prices already zooming, it is high time that every possible safeguard be established against this menace.

The drouth is sure to force prices even higher. And it will offer the profiteer a splendid smoke screen behind which he will try to push them to unjustified levels.

It is up to the dealers and the state and federal government to see that this does not happen. Basic commodities like foodstuffs must not be left to the exploitation of ruthless gamblers.

Inquiry in Order

Federal authorities this week are investigating charges that ERA labor and materials were diverted to private uses here in Boston.

Several weeks ago these accusations were dismissed as baseless. That action came after an investigation by agents of Major Roswell G. Hall, the city's ERA administrator.

We have not the slightest reason for doubting the honesty and the thoroughness of this probe. Nevertheless, we are heartily in favor of the new one that was ordered from Washington by Harry L. Hopkins, administrator of the government's huge relief program.

It is for the simple reason that there are some persons who will never believe that a man can set his own house in order. Major Hall is entitled to vindication by an outside investigation. And we feel sure that he will be vindicated.

The administration of these federal funds must, like Caesar's wife, be above suspicion.

Bank Deposits Rise

An increase of three billion dollars in bank deposits in the United States in the past year is reported by Comptroller of the Currency J. F. T. O'Connor.

Massachusetts and other New England States contributed a large proportion of the enormous total.

The gain is partly due to the reopening of more than 500 banks, from Maine to California, releasing impounded deposits.

On September 10, for example, the closed First National Bank of Portland, Me., will pay a second dividend of 31 per cent, distributing impounded funds of about $2,000,000.

The rise also is laid partly to the new deposit insurance law, which has served a good end in reviving confidence of many whose fears had been aroused by bank closings of earlier days.

The continued rise of public confidence will serve to set us far on the road to our next era of prosperity.

Higher Auto Rates

State Insurance Commissioner Merton L. Brown is scheduled to announce higher compulsory insurance rates for Bay State autoists September 1.

Mr. Brown has been quoted as saying:

> "The general public has very little knowledge of the complicated and involved problem which confronts us in the determining of rates."

It would probably be well if the public were enlightened about this problem. And better still if it could be CONVINCED that the law is justly administered.

It is hardly likely ever to be convinced that the zoning system is fair. The number of voices of important people raised for repeal of our compulsory insurance law this year is the largest heard since its enactment.

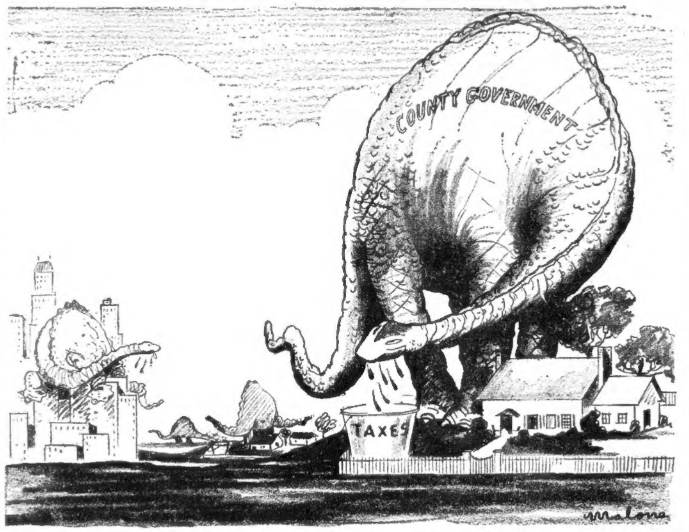
Obsolete But Not Extinct



In Montana they are laboriously exhuming 4500 dinosaur bones. The huge creatures became extinct some 125,000 years ago.

Counties, useless counties, are the dinosaurs of American government, obsolete but not yet extinct. We have thousands of them, all preying on the nation's taxpayers.

It is a one-sided game, in which the parasites always win and the taxpayers always lose.

That is why the politicians are fighting to retain the ox-cart government system of 14 counties in Massachusetts where fewer would be enough.

With a reduction in political subdivisions and politicians we could have more and better schools and still save enough for a vast reduction in taxes.

Aid to British Lines -:- By James T. Williams, Jr.

Secretary Wallace appears in his famous proposal to "plow under" the American Merchant Marine, by depriving it of any further federal aid, to have rushed to the support of the British government and the British ship owners.

On July 3 last, the eve of American Independence Day, Sir Walter Runciman, president of the British board of trade, which corresponds to our department of commerce, talked to the House of Commons on the troubles of British shipping.

FEDERAL AID ESSENTIAL

It appears that Britannia no longer rules the waves so overwhelmingly as to assure British complacency. Sir Walter was alert for Runciman is a famous and active British shipping family, and in Britain ship owners have long been deemed a valuable asset to the state.

Sir Walter described the shipping policy of other governments as unfair and announced that "we intend to communicate with foreign countries to ascertain their views on the possibility of international measures to facilitate the reduction or abolition of subsidies."

Through long and costly experience the American people finally learned that federal aid for American shipping is absolutely essential for the same reason that tariff protection is essential; to protect the American ship from the lower construction and operation costs of foreign competitors.

American ships will be able to compete, unaided by the federal government, with Japanese, British, Italian, German and Scandinavian ships about the same time that the Iowa farmer in the home state of Secretary Wallace finds himself able to compete with Argentine and Russian farmers.

We may expect a British invitation shortly, if it is not already in the possession of Secretary Wallace, to participate in a British-called, British-organized and British-controlled international conference, which will offer just about the same attraction to the American as the various disarmament and debt conferences into which they have been plunged by their silly diplomats and stupid politicians.

U. S. STAND HURTS BRITAIN

The British proposal to abolish or limit governmental aid to shipping is obviously addressed chiefly to the United States, because the post-war development which most disturbs Britain today is the audacious determination of the American people to maintain their independence on the seas by means of an independent merchant marine of their own.

Before the great war, only 10 per cent of American foreign commerce was carried in American ships and most of that went to nearby countries. British, German, Japanese, French and Scandinavian ships enjoyed the bulk of the carrying of American exports and imports. The stars and stripes were seen in foreign ports only when our naval vessels happened to cruise abroad.

When the great maritime powers of Europe began to fight and their merchant ships became the targets for enemy submarine attacks and capture, American goods rotted on the docks. Freight rates soared. Southern farmers, accustomed to exporting a great part of their cotton crop, saw the lint up on their hands. Its price sank lower and lower.

Then the South appealed to the families of the nation to "Buy a bale of cotton," and save the Southern farmers from the emergency caused by the lack of American ships to carry the export cotton surplus safely abroad.

As a result of that bitter experience and of the subsequent well-nigh disastrous delay in moving our American Expeditionary Force across the Atlantic when we entered the war, this country had to build a three billion dollar war fleet.

For a decade the United States played with the problem of a permanent shipping policy, incurring, meantime, vast losses in government operation. Then the Jones-White Act, which was supported by both Republicans and Democrats in Congress, established a national shipping policy, which declared it to be "necessary" that the United States have a merchant marine adequate to carry the greater part of our foreign commerce and to serve as a military and naval auxiliary in time of war or national emergency.

LESSON TO FARMERS

All American farmers have good reason to remember the lessons of the perilous "shipless America" which Secretary Wallace would bring back. Even today, British ships carry approximately one-third of the foreign trade of the American people, as much as is borne in the ships of our own merchant marine. The rest is carried by other foreign flag ships, Japanese, German, Scandinavian, French and Italian, all of which are heavily subsidized by their respective governments.

If Secretary Wallace is permitted to "plow under" the American merchant marine, the stars and stripes will again disappear from the seven seas, and the nation which produces nearly fifty per cent of the world's total production will be without its own delivery wagons in foreign trade.

Human Side of the News; Visit to Saratoga

By Edwin C. Hill

A few years ago, I met my old friend, Col. Joe Hayward, in the lobby of the Grand Union Hotel at Saratoga. Joe, a track follower, with mysterious sources of income, well along in his seventies, was erect and vigorous. Celebrating our chance meeting we engaged in a friendly scuffle. Joe's muscles were hard as iron and he could have put me down with no trouble at all.

"How do you do it at your age?" I asked.

"I exercise two hours a day and take the mineral baths here," he replied. "I have to keep myself like an athlete, you know."

"But why?"

"It's the only way I can keep up with my drinking."

NEW FLOCK COMES

He was quite serious. And, in that day of the rococo splendors of old Saratoga, before prohibition and before even a hint of a world depression, I found many other ruddy, vigorous affluent men who used one of the greatest natural spas in the world to condition them for industrious and systematic drinking.

"Boiling rich drunks," was Saratoga's great industry in those days, as a local physician rather baldly stated it to me.

I re-visit Saratoga. In the years between, the life-giving springs have kept on flowing, John Barleycorn has departed and returned, a new flock of touts, fixers and railbirds has come along, and in the lobby of one of those great, sprawling, yellow-and-ochre hotels you "could shoot a deer," as George Jessel once put it.

The race track crowd, with their $40 panamas, rakishly drooped, and their pleated pants, look much the same, but when one visits the springs he realizes that a cataclysmic change has come over the old Saratoga.

Where such famous whips as James Hazen Hyde used to drive up with their tally-hos, all hands set for a sulphur bath after an evening of revelry, there are earnest and serious burghers, driving up with their flivvers, bringing their wives and babies; there are beschelted East Side mothers, and old men with fine, ascetic rabbinical faces, expounding to younger groups the curative properties of the many and varied mineral waters which flow miraculously from the soil—springs which George Washington used to visit, and which he tried to buy.

THERAPY OF WATER

There are hard-driven white collar folk, allaying or possibly banishing those occupational ailments of the city dweller, in their brief holiday.

The foreign born are there in legion, for in Europe, medical science has gone far in expounding to multitudes the therapy of water containing ammonia, lithium, potassium, sodium or barium, these are only a few of the curative ingredients of these waters of limitless flow.

The State of New York, with both Alfred E. Smith and Franklin D. Roosevelt helping a lot, has made possible this easy public access to the springs and their uses, under scientific administration, as one detail of a vast health program.

To date, the state has spent about $5,000,000 in the two splendid bath houses now in use and on the great spa which will be completed by next summer. Of this amount, $2,000,000 was state funds and the remaining $3,000,000 was obtained from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The new spa is being built with the consultation of Dr. Granz M. Groedel, the great German cardiac specialist, now in New York.

During the last few years, it has been discovered that the most definite curative properties of the waters lies in the field of heart ailments, and it is indicated that the new development will constitute an epochal advance in this kind of therapy.

It was in 1910 that the state took over the reservation of the mineral springs, exercising its power of eminent domain. Private owners had been extracting the mineral salts and using them to charge manufactured waters.

There was danger that this exploitation soon would exhaust the springs. The state took over 163 springs. In twenty years, it not only has conserved them, but has integrated them in a splendid scientific development.

AT THE BATHS

The great Lincoln bathhouse is for the less affluent visitors, but fully staffed and equipped for complete medication and the full use of the waters.

The Washington bathhouse, where prices are higher, affords greater luxury and privacy and certain elaborations of treatment. They give around 3000 treatments a day, or more than 100,000 per season—with a steady increase in the proportion of women.

In the Lincoln baths, there are three wings for men and nine for women. No one is barred. Each year there are about 17,000 free treatments for those who cannot pay. The baths and the old "Drink Hall," in downtown Saratoga, where one loads up on mineral water for a dime, have been self-supporting from the start.

Conrad in search of his youth, may pick up a shred of it in these rejuvenating springs, but not at the track, not at those imposing old hotels, not on Saratoga's Broadway. Canfield's gambling casino is a sedate museum in the park, as decorous as a Carnegie library, with no ectoplasmic hangover of those gay dogs—long gone—who used to play the six-eight, the comb, the zig-zag or the red and black, with fistfuls of $20 chips.

All the old "hot spots" are gone—scattered around the lake by the automobile. Those incredible old hotels with their iron-pillared verandas, remain in all their stately elegance, but just to think of two-stepping once around the vast and empty ballroom makes one think of his arthritis and those mineral springs.

Repeal has helped the hotels quite a lot, and the legalizing of betting is stepping up the tempo at the race track. The bootlegging gang of a few years back, loud dressers and careless spenders, has been replaced by a clan of mysterious yeggs which the police haven't quite solved—cagey young fellows, most of them, and up to no good, say the John Laws.

But it is notable that in all the past years none of these visitors has staged anything rough in Saratoga, and the town has been kept astonishingly free from crime. And the word has been that while the springs are doing a rushing business, the rowdy-dowdies and gambling joints around the lake are starving to death.

That seems all to the good, of course, but—"when the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be—". It would be interesting to see what a couple of jiggers of old time prosperity would do to Saratoga.
